City refuses to divest from South Africa

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Newton Retirement Board (NRB) adamantly refuses to divest its $1 million in holdings from South Africa, despite the appeals from Newton North High School students, Rep. David Cohen (D-Newton) and Sen. Jack Backman (D-Brookline).

"We have no plans of changing our current investment practices," NRB member John Colella said. "The biggest reason is our responsibility to invest the funds of the board in the best interest of our city employees. No aspect of divestment is in their best interest," he said.

The bottom line, he added, is the board has "sound financial investments" in South Africa.

Newton's lack of support in putting economic pressure on the South African government is an "embarrassment," Backman said.

"Newton stands out like a sore thumb compared to the actions taken by other cities and towns in the commonwealth," he said. I'm embarrassed by it and I hope the citizens of this city are too."

According to Backman, Newton is the first city in the state to refuse divestment.

The debate has also sparked the interest of some Newton North High School students. Apartheid Week at the schools last month "opened my eyes to what's going on down there," Newton North senior Steve Calechman said.

Calechman and several other students addressed the board on the moral obligation of economic withdrawl.

"No pressure was put on the board before this and I don't think anyone will pull out if attention isn't brough to it," Calechman said. "I wasn't really surprised that the board is standing so firm in their decision. Divestment is a big step. I don't think you can expect a miracle only after one meeting," he added.

Laurence Marino is the only NRB member whose position is less clear and perhaps promising, according to Calechman.

"I'm not sure which way Mr. Marino will go but at least he showed a willingness to keep the issue open for discussion," Calechman said.

Marino was unavailable for comment.

Divestment is a "symbolic act" to show the South African government that the United States opposes the policy of Apartheid, Backman said.

Is that you, Mary Lou?

NEWTON CENTRE - Just as Mary Lou Retton won the hearts of people around the world with her spirit and mastery of gymnastics, Leora Bloch could do the same in the 1988 Olympics. She can inspire amateurs into believing that they can do it too. She makes it look so easy.

Leora, a Newton South senior, has mastered most gymnastic events, but her specialty is rhythmic gymnastics - a new Olympic sport which is a unique combination of ballet and gymnastics. The sport also requires superior coordination as the gymnast has to maneuver props such as a ribbon, a ball, clubs or a hoop as she's dancing.

"A judge at one of my competitions told me to try rhythmic gymnastics because she thought I had done very well in the dance element," Leora said. "I

New budget: $115 million

Warnings of fiscal gloom from mayor

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Sounding hopeful at some points and grim at others, Mayor Theodore D. Mann Monday night said the city's 1987 budget picture is sound, but "huge deficits" may loom in the years ahead.

Mann made this assessment while announcing next year's $115 million municipal budget to the Board of Aldermen.

He summed up his point by saying this year's budget may send "conflicting messages" to residents. "Are these the best of times?" he asked. "Or the worst of times?"

"I believe that 'the times,' so to speak, are indeed better than five years ago, when our first full Proposition 2 1/2 budget was prepared," he said. "I also believe we can experience the worst of times very quickly ... "

The city has suffered "deep" cuts in federal funds, but has a multi-million dollar budget surplus, he said. Residents are facing "unprecedented" hikes in sewer and water rates, yet Newton maintains a reserve tax capacity, the mayor noted.

"The environment of conflicting messages has only served to heighten the already keen competition for scarce resources," Mann said. "Our unions now have inflated expectations. Other groups seek greater expenditures of property tax dollars that, while worthwhile, are beyond the municipal mandate."

The mayor singled out the School Committee as one source of conflicting messages.

Mann criticized the committee for including temporary state money in the latest teacher raises, funds that are not

Officials disagree

NEWTON — Two members of the aldermanic Finance Committee share Mayor Theodore D. Mann's worries about the city financial future, but a third refuses to adopt that pessimistic view.

They were reacting to Mann's annual budget address delivered Monday night to the Board of Aldermen.

The mayor said the city's current financial picture is solid, but fears cutbacks in federal funds, inadequate state aid, a rising School Department budget and spiralling employee salaries imperil the future.

Alderman Richard McGrath said he refuses the accept Mann's prediction of future gloom because the mayor's proposed budget contains "fat" and "surplus."

"I absolutely do not agree there is fiscal calamity," McGrath said. "Each year he predicts dire straits."

The city's fiscal picture would look brighter if officials had not made serious mistakes in its last trash contract and failed to win a $2 million state grant for its

Green's housing plans hit snag in Boston board

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

BRIGHTON — Developer Alan Green's plans to contruct a 251-unit housing complex atop Farlow Hill hit another snag last week as the Boston City Council passed a resolution opposing the plan.

The resolution, according to City Councilor Brian McLaughlin, is designed to inform the Boston Redevelopment Authority (BRA) of the density and traffic concerns expressed by abutters on the Brighton side of the project. Because the site of the former St. Sebastian's Country Day School on Farlow Hill straddles the Newton-Boston border, Green needs approval of both the Newton Board of Aldermen and the BRA. McLaughlin says his resolution came at the behest of Brighton residents upset that the plans call for too many units to be built on the Brighton side.

"We passed a resolution," McLaughlin says, "saying that we support the position of the Brighton neighborhood in Oak Square against the density and more in accordance with the existing Boston zoning."

Green is seeking 138 units in the smaller Boston section of the Farlow Hill parcel. A source at the BRA says the current Boston zoning status would allow only "76 detached dwelling units." The source says Green will have to petition the BRA for a zoning variance for the additional 62 units.

"Green needs approval from the BRA board of directors," the source says. "In addition, he needs approval from the Zoning Commission and the Zoning Board of Appeals."

While the BRA source says the resolution will carry little if any weight in the authority's decision, the spokesman for a group of Brighton residents opposed to the project disagrees.

"The BRA came out in strong support of us," St. Sebastian's Working Group Chairman Robert Scheri says. "We talked to Linda Borque at the BRA and she had the same feelings about the density, height and general impact of the proposal on the neighborhood."

According to Scheri, the BRA asked Green to change his proposal. The petition which passed in Newton would require a zone change on the Boston side. Scheri says the BRA is asking Green to reconsider that. The BRA source says Green has yet to file any plans.

Earlier this year, the developer won approval from the Garden City, but that is hinging on his ability to win approval from Boston. In addition, for Green to sell the units only to persons 55 or older, he needs passage of legislation in the Statehouse that would allow restricting sales of units by age in a parcel of land less than 20 acres.

Brighton: Newton's 'weak sister'

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

BRIGHTON — In many ways, the border between Newton and Boston is more than just a line on a map.

Where the perception of Newton, known as the Garden City, is that of an affluent western suburb of white collar workers living in Victorian homes, Brighton is known as a run-down center of urban decay where blue collar workers live in triple deckers.

While both of the above descriptions are exaggerations, there is a marked difference between Newton and Allston-Brighton financially and aesthetically. According to some Allston-Brighton civic leaders, one reason is that Newton's municipal government is more responsive to the needs of its citizens. As a result, they say Newton will continue as the Garden City while Allston-Brighton will continue as the compost heap.

"We feel like a weak sister to everyone," Community Beautification Council (CBC) President Brian Gibbons says. "If we had the Newton Board of Aldermen negotiating for us, maybe that wouldn't be the case."

Gibbons, whose organization represents some 400 Allston-Brighton residents, says density disparities favoring Newton in developments on the Newton-Brighton border come about because Boston city officials are not as responsive as Newton officials.

Community leader Brian Gibbons

"The people of Newton scream to the Board of Aldermen and they make sure that all the density goes onto the Brighton side," Gibbons says. "We scream to the Boston Redevelopment Authority and we get nothing. The BRA doesn't even know where Allston-Brighton is. They just shove development down our throats."

Gibbons says developer Alan Green's plan to construct a 251-unit housing complex atop Farlow Hill, which straddles the Newton-Boston border, is bringing the situation to a head.

"Newton tends to funnel all the traffic toward Brighton," he says. "They close up streets and, in the Green petition, entrances and exits will be closed. Also, all the nice townhouses and open space in that development will be in Newton while we get all the tall buildings and more units on less land."

The Green petition calls for constructing 113 units in Newton on 9.9 acres of land and 138 units on 6.4 acres in Boston. Gibbons calls that disparity "typical."

"It always seems that Newton will approve or disapprove a project and Boston will accept what is left, which is usually the major density, traffic and safety problems."

With all the differences between the prosperity of the two cities, Gibbons says animosity is a natural by-product. Animosity on the part of Brighton

ACT releases its latest 'hit list'

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON - A local watchdog group says the nation's top three television networks have earned the dubious honor of "trying to fool all the children all the time."

The "Big Three" of TV appeared prominently on the first annual "10 Most-Wanted List" drawn up by Action for Children's Television (ACT), a national advocacy organization based in Newtonville since 1968.

Although ACT chose April 1st - the date traditionally reserved for mischievous trickery - to announce the sardonic distinctions, the group's leader said the list is no joke.

"While life got better for children's television in the 70s, the Reagan administration's policies and deregulation have it going back into a condition that's worse than when we started," ACT President Peggy Charren said yesterday.

"It may sound a bit foolish, but the sentiments behind it are very serious. ACT's 10 Most Wanted may not have commited armed robbery, but by their actions and inactions they are robbing our children of valuable opportunities to learn and grow," she added.

Pragmatism is the main reason ACT selected April Fools' Day to unveil its list.

"We keep saying the children need more service from television, but, if you don't think of an unusual way to get the message out, people stop paying attention to you," Charren said.

ACT drew up the list of television industry bigwigs, advertisers and government officials based on the complaints and observations it has received from parents, educators and citizens across the country.

ABC, CBS and NBC are wanted "for inertia" because they have failed to air daily or even weekly shows for kids during the weekdays.

The Reagan administration is wanted "for shortsightedness" because it proposed the elimination of federal funding for the Public Broadcasting Service.

Federal Communication Commission Chairman Mark Fowler earned a place on ACT's list for the "insensitivity" of his "let them eat cable" attitude toward children's television.

G.I. Joe, Chuck Norris, Rambo and other action-packed programs, cartoons and movies received the group's "bestiality" award "for teaching young people the new commando-like patriotism of the 1980s."

The managers of "many" independent TV stations are wanted "for manipulation" because they devote "after-school hours to 30-minute ads starring brand-name toys."

The FCC made the ACT list "for recklessness" for failing to enforce the Communications Act as it pertains to children's television and the nation's tobacco companies' smokeless tobacco ads earned a "for malice" slot.

ACT also cited the Federal Trade Commission "for lethargy the National Association of Broadcasters and the National Cable Television Association "for betrayal;" and toy manufacturers "for greed."

"The saddest thing about our 10 Most-Wanted List is that a good number of these problems have been with us for a whole generation," said Charren, who added that Europeans cannot believe America does not have a single, weekday program for children.

"Civilized societies don't deal with children that way," she added.

"Part of what motivated this list is anger," Charren said. "Anger at all these institutions that ignore children because they don't have any political power, they don't vote and they don't have any money."

ACT is currently asking concerned parents to lobby Congress for passage of the Children's Television Educational Act, which would provide an alternative to toy-sponsored programs by creating a marketplace for new initiatives and creative thinkers.

Charren also suggested that parents help their children be more selective about the programs they watch and to discuss such programs with them.

April Fools' Day 1986 also marks ACT's first day of business at a new location. The group's office in a two-family home at 46 Austin St. is slated for development, forcing a move to smaller confines at 20 University Road in Cambridge.

Quicker city services

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — If the Board of Aldermen approves, residents should enjoy faster service at City Hall, thanks to 63 micro computers to be purchased over the next three years.

Richard Walsh, director of management information systems for Newton, is asking aldermen to spend $70,000 for 20 micro computers this year.

He hopes the city will purchase 20 more in fiscal year 1987 and 23 the following year. "I think it will allow City Hall to better serve the citizens," he said.

Citizens who go to City Hall now sometimes have to wait while an employee locates information and occasionally they have to return the next day, Walsh said.

When the computers are installed and operational, "We're going to have that information and print it right out," said Walsh.

The micro computers — distributed by Microsource Financial — will enable employees to call up information quickly, Walsh said.

Some of the micro computers will have "hard disk capacity" — that is, the capability of storing a great deal of information inside the machine itself, Walsh said.

For large items that remain relatively unchanged over the years — such as the city's roughly 26,000 sewer-water hookups — hard disk storage is invaluable.

Other micro computers will store lesser amounts of information on floppy disks, said Walsh. They will, for example, enable a secretary to correct an error in a letter by recalling it on a computer screen rather.

"I can see less secretarial time," Walsh said. "You don't retype things."

The Department of Public Works (DPW) control center will be able to log each service request on computer, which will then print out work orders, Walsh said.

A list of pot holes the DPW temporarily patches in the winter can be printed, telling workers exactly what spots need permanent repairs in the spring, he said.

The micro computers will enable the city to develop a motor vehicle accident file. When a motorist is involved in a new accident, it can be added to the list. "So the file just keeps building," Walsh said.

The Law Department will be able to store new legislation in the computers, he said. Right now, city solicitors and other department employees have to keep such documents in file cabinets, he said. "They are in dire need," he said.

Walsh said almost every department will receive at least one of the micro computers this year.

If aldermen approve the request — which Walsh hopes they will do sometime in April — the city could have the micro computers two weeks later, he said.

Eventually the micro computer could make one common office machine go the way of the dinosaur. "I think the typewriter will be obsolete," he said.

$7 million in new costs in new budget

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann's proposed $115 million budget has more than $7 million in new costs, about 7 percent more than last year's expenses.

Most of that rise is attributable to higher employee salaries, increased state sewer-water charges and $1 million to be set aside for possible tax abatements, according to the mayor's figures.

The actual hike in the cost for school and city services is less than one percent of the total budget, the figures show.

Around one year in the making, the proposed fiscal 1987 budget was revealed by Mann Monday night to the Board of Aldermen.

The roughly 700 page budget document shows how the city will raise the $115 million and how that money will be spent.

The main funding source as expected is property taxes, which account for $84.8 million or 73.4 percent of the total.

Local revenues make up $16.4 million or 14.2 percent of the funding. The city will receive about $12.1 million from the state, which makes up 10.5 percent of its total receipts.

Federal money will total $300,000 or .3 percent of the city's total. Restricted funds make up $1.8 million or 1.6 percent of the city's total earnings.

The mayor has proposed a $45.6 million school budget that would be 41.2 percent of the city's expenses. The figure could become a source of controversy as it is around $800,000 less than the School Committee has approved.

Other expenditures include:
*Public Facilities - 18.3 percent
*Public Safety - 14.2 percent
*Fixed Costs - 13.2 percent
*Intergovernmental - 4.5 percent
*General Administration/Support - 6 percent
*Community Enrichment - 2 percent
*Legislative & Executive - .5 percent

Of the more than $7 million in new costs, $3.7 million is attributable to municipal employee wage hikes and $1.2 million to increased charges by the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA), the mayor's proposed budget shows.

The city needs to set aside $1 million for tax returns because the Assessing Department is revaluing all properties. Usually, tax abatements are high during a revaluation period, Mann said.

Other new costs include $140,000 for the city's refuse contract and $54,000 for its debt service, the budget states.

The Board of Aldermen has the authority to cut bottom line budget figures and has 45 days to act on Mann's proposal.

like it so much better. It's not as scary or as dangerous as the other events like the balance beam."

Most gymnastics events involve physical risk. Even though rhythmic gymnastics is not as dangerous as other events, Leora said, injuries go along with the sport.

"I hit my head so many times with the clubs when I first started, I got used to having a sore head. The clubs are the hardest and most dangerous event."

Injuries aside, Leora said the sport "fascinates" her.

"It's really such a beautiful sport," she said. "I've only been doing it for a year, but I have a strong dance background and that's probably why I picked it up so fast."

If Leora does well in the regional competition this weekend, she can go to the Olympic training center in Colorado this summer. The camp prepares athletes for a higher level of competition. It also tests their potential for the Olympic competition.

Although the Olympic dream is in the back of her mind, Leora said she can only take one day at a time.

"I haven't really thought about it because I don't think it's going to happen," she said. "In a way it's so far beyond me right now. I try not to look that far ahead because I need to concentrate on one thing at a time."

Training, diet and psychological preparation are all part of Leora's daily routine. It's hectic and demanding, and love for the sport is what motivates her.

"I don't think I would have done so well in my last meet if it wasn't for my mother," Leora said. "She is always there encouraging me. She's a great emotional support."

Barbara Bloch helps her daughter with her routines. She used to teach ballet, and Leora said her mother's trained eye is a great asset.

"She's actually very easy to work with because she's highly motivated," Barbara Bloch said. "Sometimes it's very difficult to teach your own children, but Leora is very responsive. What ever she does, she does well."

Leora's parents go to as many meets as they can. Barbara Bloch said it is much more relaxing to watch Leora do rythmic gymnastics than it is to watch her on the balance beam.

"You just want to swallow your heart when she gets on the beam," she said. "It's beautiful to watch for most people, but it's a different story when it's your own daughter up there. It's tough to watch with ease."

The night before a meet, Leora's mother prepares a spaghetti dinner and loads Leora's body with carbohydrates. For breakfast, she eats light, high energy food.

"The morning of the meets, I try to eat no food that is too filling because it slows me down," Leora said.

The night before a competition the jitters set in, but Leora tries to occupy her mind with other diversions and makes sure to get a good night's sleep.

"It really doesn't hit me until the morning of the meet," Leora said. "Before I do my routines, it's important for me to be by myself so I can go over the steps of my routine in my mind. I don't like watching the people that go before me because it makes me more nervous."

Leora placed first in the state gymnastic competition and second in the tri-state meet. She received the 110 Percent Award for Newton South gymnastics and she is the only Newton South senior to make the Dual County League All Star Team for the balance beam.

Although it would be an honor to be on the Olympic team, Leora said it wouldn't be the end of the world if she does not make it.

"So far I'm satisfied with my accomplishments. It would be wonderful if I made it, but I still have a long way to go," she said.

Newton Planning and Development Board
NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING FOR PROPOSED CHANGE TO THE NEWTON COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986
Monday, 7 April 1986 - 9:00 pm - RM 209 - Newton City Hall
1000 Commonwealth Ave., Newton, MA

PROPOSED ADDITION OF NEW FY86 PROGRAM:
New Traffic Signal at Centre/Pearl/Jefferson Streets - $80,000
A new traffic signal has been proposed for the intersections of Centre Street with Pearl Street and with Jefferson Street. This traffic signal was originally considered under the state and federally funded Urban Systems project which is now reaching completion near that site, however, traffic counts available at the time indicated that a permit for the signal could not be obtained from the state. Provision was made, however, for subsequent installation of the proposed signal, both in the newly installed signal controller and in the installation of conduit for necessary wiring. New traffic figures indicate that a permit is obtainable from the state. Therefore funding in the amount of $80,000 is proposed for the design and construction of the new traffic signal.
Federal regulations require that when changes to the Newton Community Development Program are proposed, including additions, substantial changes or deletions of programs, the City must hold a public hearing prior to making recommendations concerning proposed changes.
Comments on this proposal may be submitted until 21 April 1986 to the Community Development Program, City Hall, 1000 Commonwealth Ave., Newton Centre, Newton, MA 02159.

Cab driver nabbed for drug possession

NEWTON CENTRE — A Newton Yellow Cab driver was arrested last week for alleged possession of 20 bags of marijuana with intent to distribute on Carlson Avenue, police said. The street value of the marijuana is estimated at $2,000.

Catherine J. Arsenault, 32, of Weston, was served an arrest warrant and a search warrant for Newton Yellow Cab 110. Detectives found two brown paper bags containing marijuana under the front passenger seat of the cab. Seven plastic bags of marijuana were found in one bag and 11 in the other, according to police.

Two additional bags of marijuana and a packet of Zig-Zag cigarette papers were found in the suspect's pants pockets. Arsenault's cab was towed to the police garage after the arrest. According to detectives, the drug arrest is the result of a long investigation.

Arsenault pleaded not guilty in district court Friday on two charges of possession of controlled substance Class D with intent to distribute, according to court records. Judge Monte G. Basbas released the defendant on personal recognizance. The case was continued to April 3.

Barney frankly refuses invitation

BOSTON (AP) — U.S. Rep. Barney Frank has rejected an invitation to represent the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University's 350th anniversary, saying he objects to an award the school plans to give U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III.

Havard's Kennedy School plans to give Meese an award April 9. Graham Allison, dean of the school, has defended the award, saying the school is obliged to recognize all points of view.

Frank, D-Mass., wrote to Allison, turning down the invitation to represent the school at the Harvard's anniversary celebration in September and calling the award to Meese inappropriate, The Boston Globe reported today.

"I am most distressed by the extreme insensitivity to any need by the government to act against prejudice in this society against vulnerable groups," Frank, who is a lecture at the Kennedy school, wrote.

"From his attack on the Voters Rights Act early in this administration's first term, through his divisive and unnecessary effort to undo agreements to integrate police and fire departments ... through his current efforts to appoint racists to the federal bench, Mr. Meese has labored hard to undo racial progress we have made in this society at great pain in recent decades," he wrote.

Frank, who was graduated from from Harvard College in 1962 and Harvard Law School in 1977, claimed Meese "failed personal standards that I would hope the Kennedy School would hope to impart, as evidenced by the financical dealings he engaged in when he came to Washington."

Meese has received loans from friends but has never been cited for anything illegal.

Niaomi Chase, director of communications for the Kennedy School, said Allison was sorry Frank rejected the invitation.

"We understand his position. Just as the dean stated, people are entitled to their convictions, and the school cannot tell Barney Frank or Edwin Meese what those convictions will be."

Athletic insurance eases up this year

NEWTON — The School Department appears safe from at least one insurance hike this year — scholastic sports premium bids are exactly the same as last year.

City Purchasing Agent Blair Kanbar said the schools last year had "very limited insurance claims," which is reflected in this year's low bids.

Two insurance companies submitted proposals, with Gerald Lefebvre Insurancy Agency in Boston submitting the lower bid of $5,980, as compared to Lester L. Broderick Insurance in Norwood, whose proposal was $8,500.

"I was pleasantly surprised by the bids," Kanbar said. "It's an outstanding price when the trend seems to be ever increasing insurance premiums."

According to Kanbar, Lefebvre Insurance has been the low bidder for the past few years.

Terry Lynch of Broderick Insurance said Lefebvre "blew us away this year.

"It's an unbelievable premium bid. I don't know how they can afford to submit such low bids. We don't understand it," he said. "We thought this year was the year his bid would go up."

The premium bids are based on the ratio of insurance claims, which have been low in the Newton schools, Lynch said.

Both bidders held the line on premiums this year. Kanbar said the school department is likely to choose the low bidder.

"It's not unusual to only have two bids for insurance such as this," he said. "It's not a very high-profit or lucrative area for insurance companies because it is a specialized area. Furthermore, competition is low because there aren't many in the business."

The bids will be sent to the School Department for review and selection.

Pines feels squeeze for space in city

NEWTON — Lois Pines is having more trouble locating office space for her campaign headquarters than she is lining up major endorsements in the race to succeed State Sen. Jack Backman (D-Newton/Brookline).

Pines, whose Brookline headquarters opened last week, said she has been having difficulty securing an accessible, affordable location for her Newton base.

"Newton apparently is in very good shape economically because there is very little office space around. It's a symptom of everything being terrific, I guess," she said.

Although she has yet to formally announce her candidacy, Pines has already been endorsed by nearly every local and state Democratic politician in the area and last week added the name of former Congressman Fr. Robert Drinan to the list.

"Fr. Drinan and I have, over the years worked on the same side of many issues of concern to residents of Brookline and Newton," Pines said. "I am honored to have someone like him help open my new office."

Pines said she expects to formally announce her candidacy "shortly."

"Every night before I go to sleep, I think, 'Thank goodness I haven't heard anything about who's running against me today,'" she added.

Pines said she "fully expects" opposition from a Brookline resident, either in the form of State Rep. John Businger or political activist Jon Rotenberg.

"But I'd love to have everybody go away and be elected state senator by acclamation," she added.

Businger said he will decide whether to mount a campaign sometime this week. Rotenberg could not be reached for comment.

Correction

The Newton Graphic last week incorrectly reported that Kenneth Lightman was the drowning victim in a 1978 accident for which the city recently paid $25,000 in a lawsuit settlement. The victim's name was actually Mark Lightman.

The Newton Graphic regrets the error.

Driver knew victim was stuck under car

BOSTON — A 20-year-old Newton man who allegedly struck a pedestrian in Boston's Chinatown two years ago was aware that the victim was underneath his car as he drove seven miles to Cambridge, according to to eyewitness testimony.

Andrew Fruman of Newton is facing seven charges, including vehicular homicide and driving to endanger, resulting from the Feb. 26, 1984 death of Bernard Clougherty, 42 of Dorchester.

According to police reports, Clougherty was struck at about 3 a.m. on Essex Street and Harrison Avenue. The incident received a subsequent investigation that alleged Clougherty's body was dragged all the way to Cambridge underneath Fruman's Pontiac Trans AM.

"We knew there was a body under the car, we just didn't know what to do," one of the two passenger's in Fruman's car, testified. "We were all scared."

Testifying before Suffolk Superior Judge John J. Irin Jr., Cotoma said she heard a "thump" while driving in Chinatown on the night of Feb. 26, 1984, after which Fruman stated he thought he hit something.

Cotoma's said Fruman, who then was 18, stopped his car at the Moon Villa restuarant about 100 yards from where the accident occurred to investigate the noise.

She told the judge that both she and Fruman checked underneath the vehicle, adding that she clearly saw the victim's "hands and wrists." Cotoma testified that she was outside the car "for less than a minute," before getting back in, after which Fruman drove off, dragging Clougherty's body.

The loud noise left no doubt there was a body underneath the car, Cotoma testified.

GPBC scandal means 'business as usual'

NEWTON — A Waltham telecommunications firm implicated in a scheme to divert millions of dollars from dozens of eastern Massachusetts cities and towns continues to seek work contracts from some of the same communities.

Acticom, Inc., of 191 High St., unsuccessfully bid last week for the right to provide seven police radios for the city's Civil Defense Department.

Ironically, Newton is one of the plaintiffs in the Greater Boston Police Council's $1.75 million civil suit against former GBPC administrator Timothy C. Coogan.

The police council's attorneys believe Coogan invested some of the $1.5 million he is accused of misappropriating from GBPC members in Acticom, Inc., and similar ventures owned by Waltham resident John R. Ackerman.

Ackerman, who moved from Littleton to 3 Azalea Road last September, was supposed to testify on his relationship with Coogan during a deposition session scheduled for this past week.

But GBPC Attorney Thomas E. Dwyer, Jr., said Ackerman's depostition has been rescheduled for this week.

The Waltham man's lawyer, Robert O'Neill, has refused to comment on his client's involvement in the case.

Acticom, Inc., which specializes in NYNEX cellular phone systems and two-way radios, offered a $1,122.29 bid for the seven CD radios to be used by the city's auxiliary police.

The apparent low bid of $641.43 was submitted by another local firm, Waltham Electronics, Inc., of 53 Everett St. The third bidder, C.L. Communications of Rhode Island, offered a $1,254 purchase price for the radios.

Since 1981, Ackerman-run companies have won the right to maintain city communications equipment and are expected to be among the bidders for that service when proposals for a new contract become public soon.

Ackerman also owns Ackerman Communications Limited, which has the same address and telephone number as Acticom, Inc. He is believed to have met Coogan while working as a Motorola technician servicing GBPC radios.

DeNucci ponders auditor's contest

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

BOSTON - An April 17 fundraiser scheduled as the beginning of State Rep. Joseph DeNucci's uncontested re-election campaign may turn out to be the start of his bid for the job of state auditor.

DeNucci (D-Newton/Waltham) indicated Monday that the party at the Hillcrest Function Facility in Waltham could present the perfect setting for his official entrance into the toughest political scrape of his career.

"I had a fundraiser, kick-off party for my re-election planned at Hillcrest prior to (State Auditor John J.) Finnegan's announcement. Now, with things the way they are, that could be an election kick-off for state auditor," he said.

"I like the date," he added.

If DeNucci decides to seek the statewide post, his constituents in northern Newton and southern Waltham can expect to be deluged by politicians seeking to suceed him.

The former middleweight contender-turned-lawmaker referred to each step in the election process as "a round," leaving little doubt about the seriousness with which he is weighing a potential run.

"I'm a candidate, but I'm not an officially announced candidate. Everything looks good and promising, but we'll have to wait and see what the field turns out to be," DeNucci said.

Despite his unofficial status, DeNucci has already managed to secure numerous endorsements from colleagues on Beacon Hill and key area politicians, including Waltham Mayor William F. Stanley, Cong. Barney Frank (D-Newton) and State Sen. Jack Backman (D-Brookline/Newton).

Stanley said yesterday he believes DeNucci would bring "the same zeal" to the auditor's slot as he has to his role as chairman of the Joint Committee on Human Services & Elderly Affairs.

"Nobody in the Legislature has done as much as Joe as far as accomplishing the nitty-gritty stuff for the people who need it most," the mayor said.

Former House Speaker Thomas W. McGee (D-Lynn), who appointed DeNucci to the chairmanship six years ago, Ways & Means Committee Chairman Richard A. Voke (D-Chelsea), Majority Leader Charles F. Flaherty (D-Cambridge) and Majority Whip Robert Correia are also lining up behind the West Newton resident.

DeNucci also said House Speaker George Keverian (D-Everett) has indicated he would endorse his bid. Endorsements from his colleagues from Newton, State Reps. David Cohen and Susan Schur, are also waiting in the wings.

DeNucci is one name on a long list of Democratic hopefuls, including State Revenue Commissioner Ira Jackson, who are sounding out support for a run as the state's top financial watchdog.

Joe DeNucci

Beside the potential challengers from his own ranks, he would face a heavyweight Republican contender in State Rep. Andrew S. Natsios, of Holliston, who is already an official candidate for the job.

State Rep. William G. Robinson, of Melrose, is said to be considering entering the race, but DeNucci believes Natsios will be the GOP's choice.

"I think Natsios will be the Republican candidate and I consider him a formidable one. I don't think Robinson would run against him," he said.

"Round one" of the fight, according to DeNucci, is securing his party's support by collecting 500 signatures from the more than 4,000 delegates expected to attend the Democratic state convention in May.

He then must capture the official support of 15 percent of the delegates present at the convention.

"Round two" is the Democratic primary in September. DeNucci considers a victory in that run-off "tantamount to election."

The final segment of what he called "a three-round bout" is the general election in November.

"But, you've got to go through round one and round two before you get to round three," DeNucci said.

Election season promises choices

As it turns out, those political mavens who opted out of the upcoming Democratic state convention because the foresaw a real ho-hum election season, with most incumbents going unchallenged, were caught flat footed.

Many would now give an autographed copy of themselves with Governor Dukakis for a ticket to the convention.

It's a healthy sign. It means the voters, this year, are going to have a real chance to determine a large part of the makeup of state government. After several municipal elections that were about as exciting as watching the paint peel in the aldermanic chambers, voters in the Garden City deserve some excitement.

Of course, the first people we have to thank for this essay in democracy are those incumbents who stepped down and triggered a scramble for their seats. We will miss many of them. But we are eager to see what changes some new faces could bring.

Put the teeth back into Ethics Commission

What it usually comes down to in the lawmaking process under the Golden Dome is how much muscle power House or Senate leadership is going to apply to any specific piece of legislation. We're keeping a sharp weather eye on a carryover bill to remedy a defect in the existing Ethics Commission's enforcement power.

Local State Representative David Cohen worked hard to get the bill passed. The corrective action got all the way to the final hours of the General Court's session, only to be lost in the shuffle. Whether it was a contrived attempt to cast it into oblivion, never to be returned, or simply that it lacked priority with Senate President Bulger is beside the point. A lot of sensitive elected officials would like to leave it emasculated.

It is our hope President Bulger, consummate reader of the public mind that he is, will clear the road this time. He knows full well great need exists to improve the image of those who make our laws. We can think of nothing so useful as doing just that through anti-corruption legislation of the past half century. Its value rested not only in ferreting out ongoing corruption, but in giving exposure to conflict of interest situations which could so easily lead to misuse of public funds and authority.

The law was working beautifully in the cities and towns. Commission officials received a constant flow of requests for clearance on possible conflict, as did the office of the Attorney General. It placed the burden of proof against undue influence on those serving in local government. In the summer of 1985, the Commission had its teeth extracted when the State Supreme Court ruled an error in the law prevented it from enforcing standards of conduct.

Immediately, new legislation was filed and appeared to have broad acceptance on Beacon Hill. Under Speaker Keverian, the House responded with a 134-1 vote in favor. The Senate dragged its feet, perhaps with persuasion from lobbyist former House Speaker Bob Quinn, who has represented clients involved with the Commission. Now, the Senate is again on the spot after a repeat 134-1 affirmation in the House. The astute president of that body should acknowledge the value of what Common Cause and other civic groups are seeking. An ethical watchdog agency does something for official dignity and pride in government.

State surplus suspicious

By William G. Robinson

In his budget message only two months ago, Governor Dukakis projected a revenue surplus for FY'86 of $217 million - a figure that was ridiculously low in the mind of anyone fairly and responsibly keeping track of revenues.

Just the other day, the Dukakis Administration quietly more than doubled this estimate to $510 million.

To the casual observer, this appears to be good news. However, something is drastically wrong, and frankly bordering on the dishonest, when the administration suddenly doubles an estimate it made only two months ago. It certainly does not say much for an administration that sells itself on top management and yet does not even know how much money the state has or will have at its disposal.

The process of accurately reporting and estimating revenues is important in determining what programs will be funded, which ones will be cut, and how we will share the surplus and provide relief for our taxpayers. As with so many things, however, it oftentimes becomes political.

The practice of hiding surplus revenues is not new to the Dukakis administration. In fact, for the past three years, Dukakis has become a master at it. However, there comes a point when even Dukakis officials admit the surplus is "embarrassingly large," as is the case right now.

Much of what happens in the upcoming budget fight will depend on how much money is "surplus." Judging from our estimates, which so far have been not only conservative but accurate, the surplus will be large enough to fund several things, including 100 percent reimbursement of federal revenue sharing losses and returns of a full 40 percent of growth revenues in direct local aid.

In addition, the surplus will allow consideration of further tax cuts, including a more substantial mortgage interest deduction for homeowners, a larger renter's deduction, an income tax exemption on unearned income for the elderly and a review of the possibility of funding federal programs that provide services to the handicapped and elderly that may incur funding cuts.

Fortunately, Massachusetts is in excellent financial shape. The most important thing is to ensure that all the citizens of the Commonwealth share in our prosperity.

(William G. Robinson is House Republican leader.)

Good reasons to switch to public campaign financing

George B. Merry

Few, if any, public offices have "for sale" signs on their doors.

But that could be misleading, especially here in Massachusetts, where campaign costs for major electoral seats are going out of sight. While the big spenders are not always the winners, having the money to woo voters is hardly a liability.

The need to raise large sums to bankroll even modest campaigns has frightened away many a potential candidate, including some of outstanding quality. This tends to abandon state government seats to those who are good at fund raising but not necessarily skilled in providing the commonwealth with the best services and programs.

Clearly needed is a tight lid on what an office seeker–whether incumbent or challenger–can spend.

This, if nothing else, might reduce the pressure on candidates to seek help from special interests. Selling lobbyists and others tickets to "testimonial" dinners, theater parties, picnics, cruises, and other money-raising functions for candidates may be perfectly legal. But it tends to create the wrong public impression.

Wallet support from those bent on influencing government decisions understandably raises questions as to what extent the candidate might feel indebted to the donor and his or her cause.

Certainly, many contributions come without the faintest hint of possible strings attached. But many candidates might be more comfortable if they were able to refuse money from sources they suspect may be less than unselfish. It would be easier to say "no thanks" to such financial support, no matter how small, were funds available from another direction.

That is where public campaign financing comes in. This approach has raised a significant amount over the past 13 years for Uncle Sam through voluntary citizen contributions to a federal elections fund. Taxpayers, in filing their federal income tax returns, can designate that $1 or $2 of what they owe or have already paid be earmarked for public campaign financing to aid presidential candidates.

At least 15 states, including Massachusetts, Maine, and Rhode Island, also have, over the past decade and a half, instituted some form of public campaign financing tied to state income-tax returns.

Thus far, however, the yield, especially in the Bay State, has been small, because taxpayers here must add either $1 or $2 to their state income-tax liability instead of allotting a portion of what they pay, for state election funding.

Last year, for example, the commonwealth took in only $94,251 from this source, with less than 3.5 percent of Bay State taxpayers participating.

Meanwhile, the federal government raised $34.7 million across the nation with nearly a quarter of America's taxpayers taking part.

Certainly a check-off system, rather than the add-on arrangement, would bring in more money to help in the public financing of statewide election contest. It would not cost the Bay State that much, even were all 5 million taxpayers to chip in a dollar or two of what they had paid in income taxes.

That the check-off option would perhaps substantially increase Bay State taxpayer support of public campaign financing is indicated by the fact that Rhode Island, a much smaller state but with that system, took in $196,000 last year. That was more than double what Massachusetts raised through the add-on system.

It might be noted, however, that Rhode Islanders filing single returns now can allot $2, instead of just $1, and those filing jointly can donate $4 instead of just $2 of their taxes for campaign funding.

But for some reason, perhaps known best to state lawmakers and special interests whose influence could be lessened were public campaign financing really to take root, efforts to revamp the Massachusetts financing setup seem to get nowhere.

This year's legislation to replace the add-on option with a check-off arrangement that would cost the taxpayer nary a penny extra, has cleared the joint committee on election laws. It is uncertain, however, whether the measure gets any further, despite the strong support of Common Cause, Secretary of State Michael J. Connolly, and its prime sponsor, state Rep. John A. Businger (D) of Brookline.

Both House Speaker George Keverian (D) of Everett and Senate President William M. Bulger (D) of Boston have been impressive with their apparent lack of even luke-warm interest in the legislation.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, once quite interested in campaign-financing reform, is now less audible when it comes to strengthening public campaign financing. After all, any additional money produced through a switch to the check-off system could not come until next year, and it is this year he is running for re-election.

Current Dukakis' fund-raising pursuits seem to be anything but unsuccessful. Increased public financing would probably benefit his ballot foes who as distinct political underdogs are sure to have a tougher time gathering support dollars.

Marking Time

Politics: hazardous to kids' health

By Mark White

(The scene is the home of Paul and Polly Politico at about 6 p.m. on a Tuesday evening.)

"Mom, what's for dinner?"

"It's in the oven".

'TV dinners again? This is the 21st day in a row I've had 'Hungry Man Beef.'"

"That's not true".

"Well, OK. I know you bought us a big mac one day and Kentucky Fried Chicken another, but what about a normal non-fast food meal?"

"Sorry, Peter, but you know it's election year and until November you'll just have to survive."

"You told me that this year was going to be quiet and that there would be just a few campaigns."

"I know, but it just didn't turn out that way. I'm really busy. Tonight I'm running out to a Dukakis organizing meeting."

"But he's just got token opposition in the governor's race."

"Who's talking about Governor? We're organizing for the presidential caucuses. You see, Teddy Kennedy was supposed to run, but a few months ago he pulled out of the race. So a few weeks ago I went to a Gary Hart fundraiser, last week it was Mario Cuomo's barbeque, next week it's the Senator Bumpers wine and cheese party, and this weekend it's the Joe Biden testimonial dinner."

"But that's still only a few nights."

"Oh, no. That's not all. Wednesday night I'm going to meet Evelyn Murphy, and Thursday night I'm invited to a party for Gerry D'Amico. They're both running for Lt. Governor."

"But that's it, right?"

"Wrong. It was until Frank Bellotti decided not to seek re-election."

"I'm not gonna like this, am I?"

"Not really! You see, Jim Shannon, who I worked for in the U.S. Senate race, is running and his function is Friday night. And his opponent, Scott Harshbarger, who I worked for in the Middlesex District attorney election is having a get-together on Saturday."

"Don't tell me!"

"Yup. You see, now that Harshbarger is giving up the district attorney's position, there are people running for his seat. Sunday, I'm going to hear Paul Richardson. Monday, it's Paul Cavanaugh. Tuesday, Nick Littlefield is having a party. And next Wednesday, it's Stephen McGrail."

"My God! We're already into the 8th day and I bet there's more."

"Well, as a matter of fact, last week the state auditor decided not to seek re-election, so next next Thursday I have a meeting for Joe DeNucci. Friday, it's Larry DiCara. Saturday, it's Maura Hennigan. Sunday, it's Raymond Jordan."

"It's enough to make you turn communist!"

"And now that Joe DeNucci is giving up his seat as state representative, all sorts of people are running for his office."

"Oh, oh. Here comes week three."

"Monday, Alderman Bruce Carmichael is organizing. Tuesday, Tom Torchia wants to get together. Wednesday, Elaine Gentile is having a few of us over. Thursday, Lenny Gentile is having a coffee party."

"Is that it?"

"Oh no. We can't forget the Lois Pines for State Senate envelope-stuffing party and the Susan Schur fundraiser at Cantin' Abruzzi on that following Sunday."

"And that's it? You mean in three weeks I'll finally get a good dinner?"

"Well, I've been meaning to talk to you about that. I've decided to run for the Board of Alderman; so that following Monday I have a steering committee meeting. Tuesday ....

"I wonder if the kids eat better in countries that have dictatorships."

(Mark White is a former Newton Alderman, a practicing attorney, and rapidly becoming an ex-political junkie.)

Mixed use could solve Centre's problems

Open letter to Connery Associates:

I attended your presentation at the Newton Centre Baptist Church. From the residents' comments voiced at that meeting you have been made aware of the great dissatisfaction and frustration we experience because of the over-intensification of the business sector of our village, resulting in commercial intrusion throughout the surrounding residential neighborhoods.

I, for one, feel that our Village Center has been usurped by commercial interests that operate in isolation from the surrounding residential community. The attitude of the commercial interests is perceived to be, "Onward commercial expansion, and up the commercial rents!" When neighborhood residents complain about the commercial intrusion into neighborhoods, some members of the business sector suggest such folly as construction of a parking garage in the center of our village. Do the residents want a parking garage in the center of their village?

The business sector must have realistic horizons: Newton Centre is not a mini-mall to compete with THE MALL in Chestnut Hill. Installing shops which do not serve residents of Newton Centre Village has alienated many residents, and fragmented the community. It doesn't "belong" to the residents anymore. We walk "through" it rather than "to" it.

I would like to address the concept of "mixed use" within the village business district, an idea which you briefly touched on at the meeting. "Mixed use" is not a new concept in Newton, and it is very possibly one method to consider if we wish to de-intensify the business area.

Newton Centre Village has enjoyed a mixed use over the years. Unfortunately 10 dwelling units were recently removed from the existing housing stock within the business area when a Newton developer purchased a building at the corner of Langley Road and Union Street, evicted the tenants from these apartments, and converted these residential units to commercial office suites. The Existing Land Use map shown in your report designates this building (Langley Road-Union Street) as mixed use; however, since these housing units were removed, the building is now totally commercial.

Because of this conversion, the prescribed parking requirements more than doubled. Whereas required parking spaces for 10 apartments equals 15 parking space (1.5 spaces per dwelling unit); parking spaces required after this conversion to office suites increased to approximately 36 spaces.

Also, in your Existing Land Use map, a building you have indicated as apartments/condos (Herrick Road/Union Street) in fact contains professional offices on the ground floor, evidence that mixed use can and does compatibly exist in the commercial sector of the village.

To alleviate the congestion in the Centre, if additional stories were to be built over an existing one-or two-story building within the business zoned area (as of right) such construction should be residential (condominiums/apartments), rather than three-story office buildings. Since the landlord/developer will consider only the maximum profitability on this investment, profits from the sale of condominiums or rentals from luxury apartments could prove a reasonable incentive to the developer.

Advantages to the mixed use (business and residential) concepts: less vehicular traffic in general, less demand for commercial daytime parking, increase in pedestrian traffic, a mixed use pattern of daytime vs. nighttime traffic, encourage a sense of residential/commercial compatibility, business would be more sensitive to the needs of the residents (i.e. more neighborhood type shops vs. regional type stores), encourage residential use of public transportation, stabilize the area, restrain the demand for soaring commercial rents, improve the atmosphere of the business area (shopkeepers, residents, and business customers would share a neighborhood).

Recently the Zoning Review Committee submitted its recommendations to the Zoning Amendment Committee. Two pertinent items addressed in the ZRC document: encourage housing units within the business sector (above the first floor), and prevent housing units being removed from the market without a special permit.

I hope these suggestions will be considered carefully and wherever feasible, folded into your final recommendations.

Support UN fund for women

To the Editor:

The United States should continue to contribute to the UN Development Fund for Women.

Women produce 80% of the food in the Third World. However, development funds for agriculture usually are channeled to men who produce export crops. The League of Women Voters feels the UN Development Fund for Women can have a lasting effect on famine and malnutrition in the world.

Since it became operational in 1978 the UN Development Fund for Women, an autonomous fund within UNDP, has provided seed money for various development activities benefiting poor urban and rural women. Funds have contributed to skills training, small enterprise development, agricultural support and fisheries promotion. Particularly important among its current activities is its Africa Investment Plan which seeks to promote and support the vital role of women in African agriculture through expansion of credit facilities and agriculutural extension services, assistance in marketing and dissemination of improved food production and processing technologies.

The Senate Foreign Operations Sub-committee's deletion of the requested $500,000 U.S. contribution (S1816) was brought to our attention at our recent state-wide forum on food production by women of the Third World. The League of Women Voters is concerned especially about the condition of these women because without adequate education, health care, and support, women of the third world risk starvation for their families, communities, and, as in the case of Ethiopia, their countries.

We strongly urge that funding for the UN Development Fund for Women be included at the request level. The amount of money, $500,000, is minimal while the value of a US contribution is significant. The US should join in this international endeavor to give visibility and support to the roles of women in the development process.

If funding is not restored in the Senate, we strongly urge that, in conference, House conferees hold firm to their provision of $450,000 for the UN Development Fund for Women and that Senate conferees recede to the House.

Return the city's surplus to its taxpayers

To the editor:

Through the initiati[ve] the Newton Taxpayers Ass[n] a group of residents has the Board of Alderman t[o] reduction in next year's [property] taxes. This petition ask[s] percent decrease in p[roperty] taxes and represents a r[eturn] the Newton property taxpa[yer] a portion of the revenue su[rplus] which the city currently has.

It is hoped that the alderman will act quickly and positively on this reasonable and justifiable request. The city surplus is in effect an overpayment of taxes by the Newton taxpayer which, like an overpayment anywhere else, should be returned to those who overpaid.

A brief review of the situation reveals that Newton currently has surplus of roughly $8 million out of a $100 million budget. This surplus exists in spite of Prop 2½ which, you may recall, was to spell the end of all we enjoy and cherish about Newton. A newly enacted motel/hotel tax is expected to generate another 3/4 million dollars. The property tax base is broader as a recent moratorium on new business development demonstrates. School enrollment has declined by over 40 percent in the last decade or so. Recent winters have been mild. The cost of fuel will likely decrease over the next few years. Various city services have been turned over to less expensive private contractors.

The conclusion is indisputable. The city has over-collected taxes and for the reasons given above can be expected to be able to maintain those services we enjoy and appreciate while lowering the property tax. Keep in mind that the management of a city, a business or anything else is done best when budgets are kept lean and devoid of excessive surpluses. It is only under the pressure of tight money management that the taxpayer and consumer get the most cost effective service or product. It is therefore in the best ultimate interest of the city and its residents that the present surplus be returned.

Local lawmakers rate high in most recent ADA survey

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

State Rep. David B. Cohen (D-Newton) and State Sen. George Bachrach (D-Watertown) have been rated the area's most liberal lawmakers for 1985 by the Massachusetts Chapter of Americans for Democratic Action (MADA).

Bachrach, embroiled in the tight race to succeed Cong. Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, Jr., scored a perfect 100 from the liberal lobbying organization, edging out State Sen. Jack Backman.

Cohen's score of 93 from the MADA placed him well ahead of his colleagues in the area and earned him a fourth place finish among the 160 lawmakers in the House.

The MADA considered a total of 20 roll call votes in the Senate and 29 votes in the House during last year's session to derive the rankings.

Each lawmaker received a plus or a minus depending on whether the vote they cast was compatible with the MADA's "progressive" goals. The final scores were arrived at by dividing the total number of pluses by the total number of votes. More than one absence was counted as a minus.

Generally, a rating of 75 or more is considered "liberal" and 25 or less is "conservative.

The Senate roll calls used as the basis for the MADA's 1985 ratings included such issues as rules reform, television coverage of debate, foster care, surtax repeal, the death penalty, the seat belt law, gun control and insurance discrimination.

Among the issues considered in the House votes were aid to Central America, comparable worth, prohibiting gay foster parents, local aid, a balanced budget resolution, creation of a subminimum wage, mail-in voter registration and gun control.

Backman, who will be retiring at the end of his current term, notched a score of 95. An absence cost Backman his six-year string of perfect scores from the MADA.

On the House side, State Rep. Susan D. Schur (D-Newton) came the closest to Cohen by garnering an 86 rating from the MADA.

State Rep. Joseph DeNucci (D-Newton/Waltham) received a 62. The 1985 MADA mark registered by DeNucci was the highest he has received in the last five years.

Michael Ventrella, researcher for the MADA's public policy committee, said the results of the 1985 rankings indicate a slight shift to the left in Bay State politics.

"We are definitely seeing a larger number of legislators receiving ratings in the 80s and the 90s," said Ventrella, who compiled the roll call ratings for the last four years.

"This is most likely due to the rules reform battle. A good number of progressive legislators were elected last year as a result of that fight and other legislators, in the House especially, now vote the way they feel instead of how their leadership tells them," he added.

Most of the liberal gains, however, were offset by conservative inroads.

"The average rating was 49 in both the House and the Senate. That's hardly a liberal majority. Still, it's an improvement over last year, when the average rating was 47 in the House. The Senate went down from a 51 last year," Ventrella said.

Divestment plan rejected

"Withdrawal in itself is inconsequential in so far as the amount of money divested," he said. "It will cost the city nothing. But the chain reaction will have a significant impact when added to other cities in the state that have already divested."

The board only invests in corporations that adhere to the Sullivan Principles - an affirmative action code of conduct for American companies doing business in South Africa, NRB member Ernest Angevine said.

"I don't think the board is going to budge on this issue because we have something good going down there," he said. "Cohen and Backman don't think the Sullivan Principles carry any weight, when in fact, they are setting a good example of non-discrimination. We are like a candle in the darkness down there."

There would be "total chaos" if all U.S. corporations pulled out of South Africa, he added.

"He (Angevine) makes it sound as if we're doing something wonderful down there," Backman said. "This is just the type of molly-koddle action people would have recommended in the Civil War days."

The Sullivan Principles do not focus on the issue of Apartheid, Cohen said. They only apply to American companies who employ one percent of the black population in South Africa, he said.

"Once the blacks leave the workplace, they are still subject to the government's oppressive policy of Apartheid." he said. "It changes nothing."

Cohen said he and other divestment proponents will seek other avenues of action, such as requesting the Board of Alderman for a Home Rule petition.

"This is by no means the end of the issue," he said. "We will continue to try to bring the city's policy in line with the state's policy."

If the Home Rule petition is approved, the aldermen can ask the state for divestment legislation, Cohen said. The other alternatives are to lobby the city union employees who elect two of the three board members, or to put the question of divestment on the next election ballot, he added.

Mayor Theodore Mann said he would have "preferred a stronger statement" from the board and he hopes the board will continue discussion with the divestment proponents.

The board plans to vote on the issue April 29.

Officials disagree on financial future sewer rehabilitation project, McGrath charged. City officials have disputed his allegations in both cases.

The opportunities he alleges Newton missed make it difficult to argue that Newton needs more state aid, said McGrath.

"Administrative blunders are costing us millions of dollars a year and we still end up with an $8 million surplus," he said.

Aldermen Richard Bullwinkle focused on the mayor's statement that the city will lose around $800,000 because of cuts in the Federal Revenue Sharing and Community Development Block Grant programs.

"I think what he (Mann) said are factual statements," Bullwinkle said. "I think he's trying to make people aware that next year will be worse than this year, and that's true."

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has decided to help communities by replacing some of their lost federal money with state funds. But using a formula the state says is based on the relative need of each community, Newton will recover only around 10 percent of lost federal funds.

"Why are we receiving only 13 percent when cities of like size are receiving from 79 percent to 90 percent?" he asked. "The last time we looked, we were part of the state."

Both McGrath and Bullwinkle declined to comment on Mann's proposal to cut around $800,000 from the School Department's requested $46.4 million 1987 budget. Each said they want to look at the school budget carefully first.

Finance Committee Chairman Paul Coletti described Mann's budget address this year as his most "downbeat."

"His voice was low and silent," Coletti said. "I think he was somewhat concerned."

Federal cuts in Medicare reimbursements for municipal employees and increases in various state-mandated charges were key concerns for the mayor, said Coletti.

Mann's figures showing a 50 percent rise in the per pupil cost of educating students are a strong argument for looking carefully at the School Department's budget, Coletti said.

"The mayor has planted the seeds in the minds of the Board of Aldermen that the school budget should be looked at very carefully," Coletti said. "I think the mayor's remarks were pretty much to the point that a compromise will have to be made."

New budget unveiled available for other municipal unions.

"This ill-advised action has had an unmistakable ripple effect upon all our other unions," Mann said, "and has resulted in what at best can be described as an uneasy climate for collective bargaining."

For each percentage point in raises granted to all municipal employees, the city must spend $600,000 a year, he said. "More than any other factor," Mann noted, "personnel costs place the greatest strain on our fiscal capacity."

The mayor did not criticize the School Department's $46.4 million fiscal 1987 budget request, but he presented figures apparently designed to support his recommendation to cut around $800,000 from that amount.

School enrollment has increased 20 percent in the last six years, while the department's budget has gone up by 21 percent, he said. The per pupil expenditure has risen during the same period around 50 percent, from $3,300 in 1982 to an anticipated $5,000 next year, the mayor noted.

The School Committee over that time has closed 11 schools and reduced staff by 35 percent, said Mann. "The cumulative effect of these reductions is a savings of $14 million over the last eight years that has allowed the Newton Public Schools to develop new programs," he said.

For the first time in his tenure as mayor, Mann said he would consider expending surplus cash for equipment purchases. "I will also consider this approach as a means of offsetting at least a portion of the difference between the School Committee's proposed budget and my recommendation," he said.

Cuts in federal aid, increased Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) charges, and an estimated $1 million in potential tax abatements are the other major factors in his 1987 budget proposal, Mann said.

The city will lose around $800,000 in Federal Revenue Sharing and Community Development Block Grant funds, said the mayor. The state is expected to make up only $60,000 of those losses, he said.

Responsible for the cleanup of Boston Harbor, the MWRA plans to charge Newton $1.2 million more in 1987 for sewer-water services than it did last year, Mann noted. MWRA charges will continue to escalate, he said.

The Assessing Department has requested the city set aside $1 million for tax abatements next year as Newton completes its citywide property revaluation, said the mayor. "Historically, one impact of revaluation is to drive up applications for abatements," he noted.

Because projections of the city's financial advisors have been accurate, officials have been able to make sure Newton's income has matched its expenses, Mann said.

"More than anything else, our approach to formulating this (1987) budget has been to bridge our current positive financial condition and our ominous fiscal future," said the mayor.

Failure to sign trash contract may become costly for city

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city is awaiting bids from companies interested in the solid waste disposal contract to be available when the current contract with the GSX Corp. expires in June 1988.

While officials say they are seeking the best offer possible, an alderman and a former public works commissioner contend the city may have missed the boat on the best offer three years ago.

"The city will lose around $50 million because the mayor failed to sign a 20-year contract with Resco/Saugus when he had the chance in 1983," Alderman Richard McGrath says. "Back then I said I would come back here and say 'I told you so' and that private solid waste removal contracts would go through the roof. Now I am doing exactly that."

McGrath was referring to Resco's offer to dispose of the city's solid waste for $25 per ton with options adding up to 20 years. That figure would have been subject to annual increases of 50 percent of the Consumer Price Index (CPI).

In addition, Resco was offering the city $500,000 per year for the use of the Rumford Avenue Transfer Haul station, regardless of whether the company used the facility or not, according to McGrath. That figure would have been subject to annual increases of 100 percent of the CPI.

With Public Works Commissioner James Hickey projecting increases in the cost of solid waste disposal from the current contract of about $2 million per year, McGrath's $50 million figure becomes workable. The question, however, is whether the Resco offer was viable at the time.

McGrath says it was, while former Public Works Commissioner Charles Thomas says it may have been. Hickey says the city was holding out for the best possible deal and that by going with SCA, now GSX, the Resco offer was never precluded as McGrath says.

McGrath says the Board of Aldermen twice rejected a petition from Mayor Theodore Mann to place solid waste removal on the contractual budget. That move, according to McGrath, would have forced the solid waste contract into the private sector because there would be no money in city coffers for that service.

"The board twice said no," McGrath says. "If we had hired SCA to handle our curbside pickup, it would mean the end of the Resco offer. The board knew we had a better deal. But, the mayor lobbyed, changed a few votes and got the SCA contract through the board, ending any possibility of going with Resco."

Thomas, who as Public Works commissioner helped arrange the Resco deal and stayed on as a consultant for the negotiations after entering into private industry, agrees that while the SCA deal "knocked out the Resco opportunity," the 1983 decision to go with SCA was meant to give the city more options.

"There were so many opportunities at the time," Thomas says, "that it was hard to focus on any one in particular. Given what occurred, perhaps the Resco offer was the most attractive at the time, but back then there were also other options to explore."

Among those options was for Newton to join a regional resource recovery program that would burn waste, convert it to energy and sell the energy. Thomas says there was good reason in 1982 to believe that high energy costs would make that idea economically feasible. The higher the energy costs, the lower the solid waste removal cost, he says, because the profit from the energy would have offset the cost of the disposal.

"The NESWC proposal at the time was very attractive," Thomas says. "The city recognized that there were a lot of risks involved and we looked at the high disposal costs versus the predictable costs of the Resco offer. From a municipal point of view, I think the predictable offer is more attractive, because a city is not like a commodities investor who can take risks."

He adds that, in light of low energy costs, the Resco offer is even more attractive, "but that is all hindsight. It is easy to make that kind of argument, but that is not how we saw the situation four years ago."

While he says that it would have been better to "take care of the situation once and for all, instead of having to come back here in four or five years as with SCA," the city was considering other options as well, including possible disposal sites in Boston or Millbury.

"If it there were a simple choice, then there could have been a simple solution," he says. "But, there were so many other factors that there was a level of uncertainty involved."

Hickey, however, says the 1983 deal with SCA "never precluded the Resco offer."

"The SCA contract was primarily a collection contract with a disposal component for the last three years," he says. "We asked proposers to give us a price for collection and disposal for the last three years of the contract and Resco never submitted a bid for that, they were strictly a disposal firm."

Hickey says signing the relatively short-term SCA contract was designed to give the city time to look into long-range alternatives. Hickey, contrary to what McGrath and Thomas say, states that the SCA contract signing had "nothing to do" with the Resco offer.

"That is totally wrong," he says. "It is mixing apples and oranges. One thing was a long-term deal and the other was a totally different private collection deal."

residents, Gibbons points out, is not against Newton but against Boston officials.

"I can't blame people in Newton for doing what they can," he says. "I would try to get as much as I can for my community too, but with the BRA and the Zoning Board we have here, there is nothing we can do."

Teresa Hynes, past president of the Brighton-Allston Improvement Association, agrees with Gibbons that any blame for the disparity bewteen Newton and Allston-Brighton falls squarely on the shoulders of Boston officials.

"We can't help it if they lobby better than we do," she says of Green's plans for lower density in Newton. "It is up to us to do the best job possible for Allston-Brighton. Our complaint is not with Newton, our complaint is with Boston."

Hynes echoes Gibbons' position that Boston officials are unresponsive.

"There will be more units on Farlow Hill even though there is less acreage," she says. "The traffic is being shunted toward Brighton but we can't blame Newton officials. They are doing a good job for their people. We have to complain about our elected officials."

Helping children cope with loss

'Healthy children will not fear life if elders have integrity enough not to fear death.'
— Eric Erikson

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

The space shuttle explosion that killed all seven crew members "gripped and grabbed everybody" because everyone could identify with one passenger on board — Christa McAuliffe — who was "just like us," said Dr. Martin Norman, a child psychologist who spoke recently at a West Newton Interfaith Counseling-sponsored lecture.

At the talk, entitled "Helping Children Cope with Tragedy and Loss," Norman explained that "the horror of what happened is different from other national tragedies (like assassinations), because we couldn't point a finger at anyone.

"It has given all of us a sense of unpredictability and lack of safety in the world," he said, not just children.

It follows that when explaining this tragedy to children, said the psychologist from Belmont Counseling Associates and consultant to the Children's Museum, many parents are not sure what to say.

Norman suggested that "Regardless of your uncertainties, try to be as honest and as loving as you can with children to help them understand the world around them.

"The job of being a parent is probably one of the most difficult in world," he continued. "It is a job that all of us are the least prepared for and the least educated for. How one learns to talk about death and loss has a lot to do with how your own family talked about it."

For those who find it difficult to talk about loss, he said, "this is a natural, protective instinct. Many parents don't want to upset their children. But how much are they really protecting themselves by denying and avoiding subjects that are too painful to themselves? Children are often more curious than what parents give them credit for," he said.

In suggesting ways parents can help children cope with death, Norman emphasized, "It's all right to convey to a child that you don't have all the answers. When a child is trying to cope with death, it's more important how you say something. The nonverbal side is more important than the verbal side . . . Sometimes a squeeze, a touch, a look is enough."

Convey that it is okay to express feelings through crying. Further, he suggested that parents give children a choice between attending the funeral or not. "It's important (children) have a feeling of belonging and that they know in advance . . . what's going to happen," said Norman.

Also, Norman said parents should keep in mind three basic questions children ask themselves following a death: Did I cause this to happen? Will it happen to me? Who will take care of me now?

"These questions are uppermost in children's minds when somebody's died," said the psychologist. "Children do so many naughty things. They think, 'Maybe I did something wrong and this is what happened.'"

Parents should reassure their children that they're not alone.

Further, he suggested that adults listen carefully to children's questions concerning the loss and "not rush in and throw out your own ideas."

At first, a parent may think the child is asking about the person who died, said Norman. "But really they're wondering whether you are going to die," he said.

In addition, he continued, "It's vital to keep whatever information you share simple and to tell the truth. Avoid fairytales and half-truths because euphemisms unwittingly foster the delusion that someday the loved one is going to return."

Although children do not accept death as inevitable and final until they are about 10 years old, according to the psychologist, euphemisms for death, such as "She's gone on a long journey," could lead the child to think, "Mommy didn't love me . . . and now she's not coming back."

Preschoolers, age 3 to 5 years old, view death as "a very temporary state," Norman explained, like in the Road Runner cartoons where the Coyote gets crushed unmercifully but who always comes back alive.

At this age, a parent telling a child that grandfather has died will likely evoke a response such as, "Well, when is he coming for supper?" said Norman.

In addition, this is the age when children do a lot of concrete, literal thinking, said Norman. When parents connect death with sleep by explaining away grandfather's death by saying he is sleeping in heaven, "a lot of kids become panicky about going to sleep."

He continued that children will think that, "If grandfather is sleeping in heaven, I don't want to go to sleep. I may be dead like grandfather."

A child first grapples with loss between the ages of 0 and 3 through games like All Gone and Peek-a-Boo, the latter of which comes from old English words meaning alive or dead, Norman said. During these years, children deal with "basic issues around trust and security," he said.

Increased awareness of death as something that's final occurs in children ages 5 to 10. This age group views death in a very human shape or figure. It's a time when children want the lights left on because "if the bogey man catches you, you're dead," said Norman.

Children of this age are also caught up in fantasy and magic and sometimes will blame themselves for thinking "I wish he were dead" prior to that person's death, said Norman.

As children grow up, Norman states, parents should take advantage of opportunities to integrate living and dying before a loss actually occurs — like during autumn, when the leaves are falling off the trees or when a character dies on a favorite television program.

For those parents struggling to help children cope with a real death, Norman concluded with a quote from a favorite children's television character — "What is mentionable is manageable," says Mr. Rogers.

Russians back resolution to ban nuke weapons testing

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

WASHINGTON D.C. — A spokesman for the Soviet Embassy says his country would support fully a resolution passed last week by the aldermanic Legislation and Rules Committee calling for the United States to ban nuclear weapons testing.

"I don't know how it would effect negotiations," Embassy spokesman Boris Malakhov says. "But we appreciate the efforts of ordinary people and city governments and everyone who wants a nuclear test ban treaty."

Malakhov, whose government officially halted nuclear weapons testing last August, says a test ban treaty is the first step in ending nuclear weapons proliferation.

"Ending testing is the only way to stop the arms race," he says. "That is our sincere goal. If we could get rid of nuclear weapons by the end of the century, we would."

Malakhov adds that Soviet officials are winning support from the American public.

"We are receiving a lot of letters from American citizens supporting the test ban and we are grateful to the citizens and the Newton city government because this is the right course toward security and peace."

Alderman Louis Irwin introduced the resolution on behalf of Garden City residents upset with President Ronald Reagan for continuing American nuclear weapons tests while the Soviets have halted theirs.

"A number of months ago," Irwin says, "the Soviets imposed a unilateral moratorium on nuclear weapons testing that will expire in April. They have said they will extend the ban if the United States will also ban weapons testing. Instead, the Reagan administration has pushed forward with the testing, having exploded a weapon just last week."

While acknowledging the limitations of a municipal resolution, Irwin says it is important that the aldermen make a statement on behalf of their constituents.

Ann Greenbaum, one of the residents requesting the resolution, says that nuclear weapons proliferation does have a local effect.

"This is a Newton issue," she says, "because no matter where you live, if they drop the bomb, it is all over. Also, the Reagan administration is talking about spending a trillion dollars to continue this program. That has an economic impact on all of us, no matter where we live. This is a local issue."

Alderman Wendell Bauckman, a self-described conservative, says he favors the resolution because "it is a nice thing to do."

The Board of Aldermen will vote on the resolution next Monday.

Secretaries head home

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

Newton resident Susan Faber decided to start her own business after she became fed up with working "like a dog" for somebody else for $6 an hour. So she fell back on secretarial skills she acquired before her marriage, and today earns $20 an hour typing everything from form letters to reports for submission to the federal government.

"It's been a long haul," she says perched behind one of the many computer components set up in her garage, which she refinished into an office.

But although she works "many more hours" than she did in her previous position, at least Faber is at home, where she can care for her daughter and work the hours that fit into her busy schedule.

That was the goal of nine other local secretary-enterpreneurs, most of whom quit their jobs to raise children, only to find, years later, they could use a few more dollars in their pockets.

Two years ago, Newton resident Jo-Ann Edinburgh, of Church Street, organized a network between the women to exchange clients and set hourly rates. The group meets monthly to discuss business problems and concerns.

For many of these women, working out of their homes is the closest they can come to having it all — a career plus a family, an equation to which many women have yet to find a solution.

"I work very late at night — 'til about 12 usually. That's the beauty of it," says Edinburgh, who determined there would be a "large market" for off-site word processing before leaving her position as a newspaper editor at the Jewish Times in Brookline.

"You can set your own hours," she explains, adding "most of us have children."

Coyle, formerly a secretary for a chemical company in New Jersey, decided to work out of her home because she wanted to be there when her three children came home from school. Besides, she adds, "It's nice to work your own hours. I like that very much. It's nice to be your own boss."

Faber also wanted "to be available" when her daughter came home from school. A legal secretary for four years, she left the position when her child was born. Eight years later she returned to the working world, via temporary employment agencies, to refresh her secretarial skills. She purchased her computer through a program, initiated by President Carter, offering low-interest loans to women wishing to start their own business.

"This was at a time nobody was giving money to women, and if you could get money, the interest rates were 22 percent," she recalls.

In addition, Faber enrolled in the Boston College School of Management, and expects to earn her bachelor of science degree this spring.

She joined the secretarial network because she wanted to work "on a more professional level," Faber explains. "We're professional, not just people sticking a computer in their homes (and working part-time,)" she says.

To be in the network, the women must run their respective businesses on a full-time basis. "People tend to think people working out of their homes are doing it just for the extra money," says Faber. "We want to emphasize professionalism and not just type words on a piece of paper."

Each of the network members has a specialty and a different brand of computer system. For example, Faber has experience working for CPAs, so the group funnels accounting work her direction. Also, clients requesting their work be completed on a Radio Shack computer system would be directed to Faber.

Edinburgh, on the other hand, specializes in mailing lists, and her IBM computer is set up to handle just that.

In addition to these specialties, many of the women perform other secretarial tasks. Besides typing long columns of numbers for accountants, Faber works on resumes, letters, proposals and serves as administrator for several women's associations.

Coyle types brochures, resumes, and performs secretarial tasks for doctors, lawyers and psychologists.

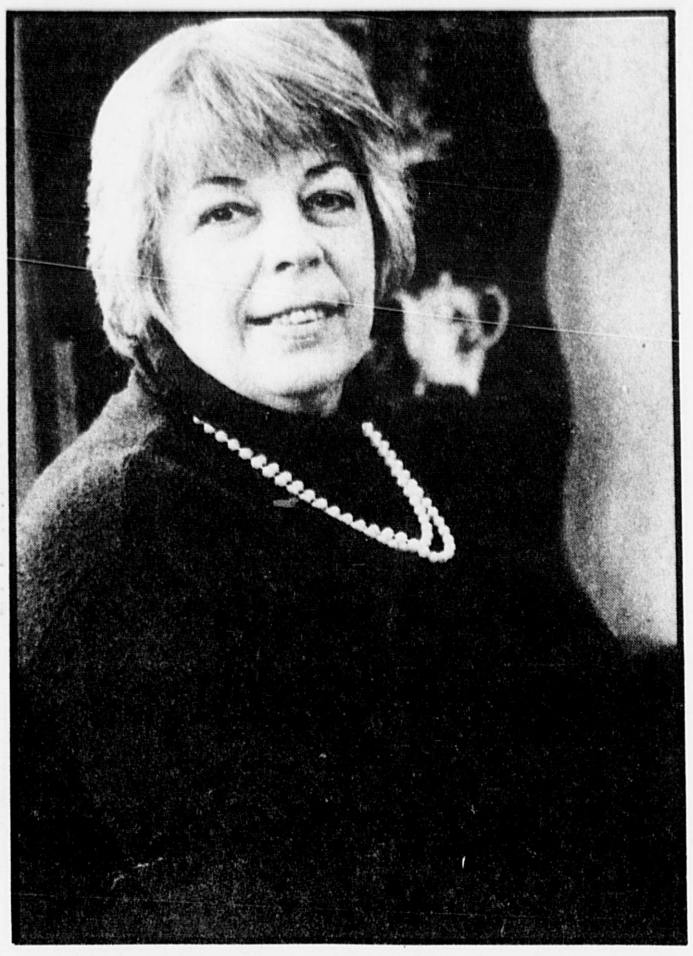

Each of the women in the network earn between $500 and $1,000 per month, according to Edinburgh, some of which goes toward buying and repairing computer components.

But more than money keeps these women busy behind their computer keyboards. They all gain satisfaction out of a job well done. "I'm proud of the work I put out," says Faber.

Changing times for a deli of an eatery

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

"Coming soon," the sign reads. "Something old, something new."

For 37 years, the Langley Deli has been a place to knosh and a place to kibitz. From salami to pastrami and everything in between, it has been an institution. Despite the fact that history books say institutions resist change, the Langley is undergoing a major metamorphosis.

Long known for its wide variety of Kosher cuisine, the deli is being gutted and will reopen sometime in late April. If everything goes as planned, the new Langley will, as the sign says, be a mixture of the old and the new.

"What we have is unique," coowner Ira Seskin says of the old deli's menu of sandwiches, soups and salads. "We would never try to change that. This place opened up back in the early 50s. As people made the exodus from the Blue Hill Avenue section of Dorchester, Bernie Dressner and Ruby Dragoff opened this place up as sort of a "G & G Deli" in the western suburbs. This was a place to go for the folks to kibitz, talk politics and get into lively discussions as well as get great Kosher food. We don't want to change that, we just want to expand on it."

Enter one doctor, Robert Brown, formerly of Montreal and now one of the foremost lung specialists in the Boston area. What, you are probably asking yourself, does this Harvard University researcher from the north country have to do with a Jewish deli?

The answer is an affinity for fine cooking combined with a slight touch of homesickness. Brown, you see, says that Canadians have this special way of cooking up chicken that, so far, no American has capitalized on. Not being one to stand idly by, he hooked up with Seskin after hearing about the Garden City restaurateur via a Seskin relative who just happened to be a patient of his. Somewhere, somehow, someone wanted the two men to get together.

"I decided to test-market my barbequed chicken at Ira's deli about a year ago," Brown says. "It has been very successful."

Brown's chicken may be successful, but once his reputation as a famous lung man got around the deli, people were asking him for medical advice as well as his recipes.

"So you're a doctor?" he says in a mock Yiddish accent, trying to explain what happens when the old ladies find out his "real" occupation. "I have this terrible pain in my chest. What should I do?"

On the bright side, the chicken is so successful that Seskin and Brown have decided to redecorate the deli, expand the hours and serve dinner. On the dinner menu, of course, will be Dr. Brown's famous north of the border BBQ chicken and ribs. While not necessarily the kind of food mother used to make, the two men figure that there is enough of a market not only to expand the deli's hours, but to franchise out Brown's chicken and rib recipe.

"This whole area is changing," Seskin says. "Just look around and see what kind of stores and boutiques are going in. Of course, there are still the people who are going to want a deli sandwich and this will still be the Langley, but we think that there is enough of a change to also offer barbequed chicken and ribs as well. I think it will fit well because this area is becoming so gentrified."

While Brown is mum on the secret behind the sauce — "a blend of secret herbs and spices" — he will say that the chickens being broiled come from balding birdman Frank Perdue.

"We tried a number of different chickens in taste tests," Brown says, "but the one chicken people seemed to prefer is Frank Perdue's broiler."

Brown's birds, it seems, are so popular that the two men have received inquiries from as far away as Florida and New York to open up Le Chick franchises. Though they are making preparations for the new chain, "that will serve a family of four a good meal for around $3 each," Seskin says, things at the deli will not change totally.

There will be some cosmetic changes in the interior of the deli, the two men say, but the food that helped form the original Langley Deli Breakfast Club back in the early 60s will remain.

"At first, it was just a bunch of guys who met for breakfast every morning," Seskin says. "But, after a while, they formed a club and it grew from an informal meeting to a formal charitable non-profit organization where the members pay dues every year."

Nowadays, Seskin says the club meets "three or four times a year and gives money to charitable and community organizations." Membership is limited to 35. "I think because there was only room for 35 caricatures on the wall," he explains.

At 33, he is the youngest club member. "I guess back in the old days, everyone was young," he says, "but now, they've all grown older, except for me. To join the club is a great honor."

The caricatures are stored safely away during the renovation, Seskin says, ready to be placed on the wall when the Langley once again opens its doors. If Brown and Seskin are a little anxious for that moment, so are the customers.

"There was this one guy who came in here after we started gutting the place," Seskind recalls. "The place was a total shambles. He stood around for about five minutes and then finally asked us if we were closed. He was really disappointed."

During a quick tour of the building, a number of similarly disgruntled people approach the two men curious as to when they would once again be able to eat at their favorite deli.

"When are they going to open this place?" a passerby unknowingly asks the two owners. "I miss the food already."

Despite no parking claims

Langley Road site will remain open

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Petitioners seeking to close down a Langley Road commercial building because it provides no offstreet parking in traffic-congested Newton Centre received plenty of sympathy last week - but no relief.

The Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) ruled that Building Commissioner James W. Cameron was correct in granting temporary occupancy permits for David Zussman's building at the corner of Union Street and Langley Road.

The ZBA voted 3 to 0 to back Cameron with member Maurice Reidy abstaining.

Some members, however, questioned whether floor space, seating and employee numbers building owner David Zussman gave to Cameron are consistent with actual business use.

Aldermen Rodney Barker, George Mansfield and Susan Basham — along with several Newton Centre residents — claim Cameron should never have issued occupancy permits because the building requires more parking spaces since its recent renovation.

After the decision, Barker said petitioners may take the case to Middlesex Superior Court. "But it will depend on the group of Newton Centre people involved in this," he said.

"It's most unfortunate if the ZBA puts citizens in the position of spending thousands of dollars to get the building commissioner to enforce the law," he said.

Last month, the ZBA ruled it did not have jurisdiction in the case because Cameron had never formally decided whether offstreet parking was needed.

Barker later uncovered a Jan. 31 letter from Cameron to Mansfield saying a building permit was issued for the premises "following a parking calculation review process."

At the time, Cameron said he was confident the ZBA would uphold his department's decision about a year ago to grant Zussman a building permit for renovating the premises without offstreet parking.

Based on last week's ZBA vote, it appears Barker won the jurisdictional battle but at least temporarily has lost the parking war.

At issue are the number of seats and employees in first floor stores and the floor areas of businesses throughout the building.

Petitioners can ask Cameron to investigate whether the figures Zussman gave to the Building Department are accurate, ZBA Chairman Harold Meizler said.

They can also take the matter to Newton District Court where Zussman could be fined $300 a day if his tenants are not living by the numbers he gave Cameron, the chairman said.

Zussman, in turn, can seek redress from his tenants if they are violating those figures, he said.

But removing tenants now after the building has been renovated would be too drastic a measure, said Meizler. "If you have a sore on your finger and you get gangrene, you don't put a tourniquet around your neck," he said.

ZBA member Anthony Summers said he did not think it would be fair to revoke Zussman's occupancy permits when his tenants may be at fault.

"Unless he (Zussman) obtained the permit under false pretenses," Reidy added.

Local ordinances were shaped so traffic-congested areas such as Newton Centre can deal with too many cars and too little parking, he said.

Newton zoning requires an owner to provide offstreet parking only when a refurbished building produces more parking demand.

Local ordinances say there should be 1.5 parking spaces for an apartment, while offices have the greater demand of one space per 300 square feet of floor space.

Antique and modern paperweights on exhibit

NEWTON — Interest in collecting paperweights has been growing since a rare antique paperweight was auctioned at Sothby's for more than $1 million.

A special collection of antique and modern paperweights, loaned by Harvey and Doris Robinson, is slated for exhibit at the Newton Free Library, 414 Centre St., from April 3 to 27.

The collection includes paperweights by well-known glass sculptors and glass blowers Victor Trabucco, Paul Stankard, Charles Kaziun and Peter Holmes and from the French glass factories of Baccarat. Clichy, the English Whitefriars and Bacchus, and from the United States factories of Sandwich, New England Glass and Mount Washington.

The Robinsons also plan to discuss their collection informally during a reception at the Library on Thursday, April 3, 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Since the mid-19th century, when glass paperweights were first made, people have been intrigued by these fascinating crystal balls that enclose and magnify the designs within.

They feature abstract designs, famous people, flowers, fruit, insects or reptiles — sometimes realistically, but more often in a stylized manner, interpreted by the artists who created them.

With the exception of sulphide paperweights, where the design includes a ceramic medallion, paperweights are made entirely of glass. The tiny flowers, figures and mellefiori canes (the small cross sections cut from glass rods to reveal the inner patterns) that make up the internal decorations are magnified many times by the contour of the glassdome that encases the work.

Newton Free Library hours are Monday through Thursday, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Friday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Saturday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 1 to 4 p.m. The library will be closed Monday, April 21, Patriot's Day. For more information, telephone 552-7145.

Special police unit to fight drug abuse

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The distribution and intensive use of drugs in the community has spurred the police department to set up a Drug Investigation Unit.

"Our emphasis is to influence our youth not to use drugs and to increase the number of arrests on the people who sell our youth drugs," Chief William F. Quinn said.

"These detectives are not undercover," he said. "We want people to know they are there so they can contact us."

Drug abusers are a menace to the community, committing violent crimes and thefts because they need money to get more drugs, he said.

"People out there know much more than we do and they should help us," Quinn said. "If people have information, I urge them to call the detective bureau. They can do it anonymously if they choose."

Years ago the department had a special drug force, but drug abuse in the community seemed to subside and the unit was dissolved, Quinn said.

"We soon realized, especiallly in the past six months, that drugs seem to be back more prevalent than before," he said.

Detective Sgt. Arthur Fryar and detectives Robert Ober and Joseph Donahue are assigned to the drug unit.

"We've taken them away from routine investigations so they can concentrate on this problem to see if we can bring in more drug arrests," Quinn said.

Quinn said he hopes the new unit will allow the detectives more time to build stronger links with drug enforcement agencies and other surrounding police departments, resulting in a "mutual swapping of information," he said.

"Sometimes we get leads and information which have resulted in arrests in other cities or towns," Fryar said. "Information is starting to come from every direction and half the work is putting the pieces of the puzzle together. We're looking for help from people in the community."

The unit plans to set up a 24-hour answering machine to allow a constant influx of communication.

"People with information don't have to leave their names if they don't want to," Fryar said.

Two boys find goat intestines

NEWTON — Two young boys caused a stir Saturday afternoon when they found near Albemarle Field a green plastic garbage bag containing some body parts from an animal.

The contents of the bag were taken to a local funeral home and checked by Medical Examiner Dr. Nathaniel Brackett, who determined that they were the intestines of seven to 10 goats, according to police reports.

The boys were walking home about 4 p.m. when they found the bag under a footbridge over a brook near the field. They went home and told one of the boys' parents, who notified police.

The animal organs appeared to be "fresh," and probably had not been under the bridge more than a day, according to police reports.

How to get started on remodeling

By Changing Times
The Kiplinger Magazine

If it's time to add a bathroom, remodel an aging kitchen, or make the basement over into a living area, it may be time to hire a remodeler.

The best remodelers are going to be booked into the future, so plan to make your selection four to six weeks before you want the project to begin, even earlier during the busy summer season.

Before you can get a good estimate of the project's cost, you must settle on plans and specifications. To get them, you have a choice of sources.

— Remodelers: This is OK as long as the builder can provide the services of a designer. Expect the company to charge a separate design fee, usually under $500, or work the fee into the overall construction charges.

— Architects: Finding one to take the job may be difficult because residential remodeling is usually small potatoes for an architect. Small firms of up to three people or architects fresh out of school may be your best bet.

This is likely to be the most expensive option; architects may charge a percentage of the construction cost, perhaps 10-15 percent. However, you're assured of professional training and partial or full project supervision.

— Designers: In most parts of the country anyone can use the label "designer," whether self-educated or formally trained. The American Institute of Building Design and the American Society of Interior Designers accredit designers, but the two groups rely on different standards.

To locate designers in your area, check in the phone book for local chapters of AIBD and ASID or look under combinations of "Home," "Building," "Residential," "Interior," "Design" and "Planner."

Although interior designers used to concentrate on just the decorative aspects of a remodeling job, more now handle structural changes to existing rooms, although they normally leave room additions to architects and building designers. But even building designers may need to call in an architect, engineer, remodeler, plumber or electrician to get plans past some building codes and to obtain building permits.

Changing Times suggests one way to test the competency and compatibility of a designer is to ask for an explanation of some facet of construction, such as the differences among subflooring options. You should get the same information from each candidate. Look for a forthright, reasonable explanation presented in a noncondescending manner and without technical jargon.

Designers often charge by the job, the hour or by keeping the difference between the wholesale and retail costs of the materials purchased. ASID found in a 1985 survey of members that the national average hourly fee was $58.

— Specialty services: The National Kitchen and Bath Association confers the designation of Certified Kitchen Designer (CDK) on experienced individuals who have been tested on construction and design.

These specialists, found at custom kitchen and bath showrooms, typically charge a fee of around $300 to $500. The fee is subtracted from the total price of the job, which normally includes cabinets, appliances and materials as well as installation. If a CKD has what you want, the price to you shouldn't be higher, and may be lower, than if you ordered from some other source.

One service, Nicholas Residential Room Designs (P.O. Box 242, Route 5, Herkimer, NY 13350), offers a mail-order service that primarily designs kitchens and bathrooms, based on a detailed questionnaire.

— Manufacturers' promotions. Many kitchen dealers and most Sears stores can provide a computer-generated kitchen plan. The plans are free or low in cost, but normally you don't get to keep them unless you buy the product.

Providing the designer with the original floor plans for your house can sometimes save you as much as 15 percent on the design fee. You can also save money at both the design and construction stages if you choose a plan that doesn't require moving existing walls, plumbing or electrical wiring.

Besides floor layouts and sketches, the final plans you get from the designer should include a set of specifications — brand names, styles, sizes, colors and model numbers of cabinets and appliances, and identifying characteristics of materials for construction, plumbing and electrical work. Use these specs as the basis for comparing remodelers' bids.

Once you've got your plans, you must choose the remodeler. Before inviting any remodelers out to examine your home, do some checking. A remodeler must be licensed in many jurisdictions, but in some that merely requires payment of a licensing fee.

Start by asking friends for recommendations. Check to see whether the contractor you are considering belongs to one of the two major industry trade groups: the National Association of the Remodeling Industry or the National Remodelors Council, an affiliate of the National Association of Home Builders.

All candidates (at least three) should visit your home to take measurements for the bid and warn you of any problems they anticipate. Each should get back to you within a week or so with a bid based on your specs.

Most remodeling jobs are bid as a lump sum. Sometimes the price is figured on a "cost-plus" basis; you won't know total cost until the work is done and an additional percentage is tacked on to the materials, labor and other specified expenses. The cost-plus approach is used when the extent of some problem can't be determined by the remodelers when the estimate is made.

Find out how the remodeler expects to be paid. Expect to make a deposit, which will be used to order your materials. A 30-50 percent down payment is typical; the smaller the job, the more remodelers tend to require up front. Be sure to hold back something until the job is finished, at least 10 percent.

Call references: Try to find someone whose home was done during the summer when general contractors may be juggling dozens of jobs at once. Ask whether you can inspect the work. (Distributed by AP Newsfeatures.)

Showers yes; tubs no

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

At Brith Sholom House, an apartment house in Philadelphia for senior citizens, the apartments come with a tub and shower. But for many of the seniors who live there, taking a bath has become a memory.

Blanche Carson, for example, explained that she hasn't sat down in a tub for about five years. She says she feels safer in the shower since she knows she will be able to get out of it by herself.

Younger Americans who may have broken a leg or sprained an ankle can identify with her. Whether by accident or design, contemporary bathtubs require considerable agility to enter and especially to exit.

According to Professor Frederick Krimgold, associate dean at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, recent figures from the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission indicate there are about 270,000 injuries in the bathroom each year, most of them resulting from falls and slides in slippery tubs.

The school's Center for Interior Architecture is currently studying the housing needs of the elderly and has found that improving safety in the bathroom is one of the highest priorities. Krimgold noted that often a cycle of illness, institutionalization and death starts with a fall in the tub and a broken hip, which makes it impossible for an individual to care for himself and leads to placement in a nursing home.

Although a number of devices such as grab bars and shower seats have been on the market since the late 1960s, those studying the field have found that they are rarely used in the home.

Elderly individuals have a great reluctance to appear handicapped and in addition the devices have an institutional look and are frequently expensive or require expensive installation, according to Bob Samsing, director of marketing for American Standard Corp. The company recently awarded a grant to Virginia Polytechnic Institute to develop a bathroom that would address the needs of an aging population.

What direction such new bathrooms would take is not completely clear, according to Len Singer, co-director with Robert Graeff of the VPI design project which is being carried out at the school's laboratory in Blacksburg, Va.

Singer says he and his colleagues are aiming to do more than just develop a few new devices like grab bars or computerized equipment.

"These people are at a stage in their lives where they are not interested in learning about new technology. Our aim is to make the bathroom comfortable, nonthreatening and safe and to protect people from injury; or if they should be injured, to minimize its seriousness," he stated.

Some ideas that might be part of rethinking of the bathroom include keeping the temperature of all contact points warm to the touch; providing call buttons at floor level where they presumably will be more useful than high on a wall; and making grab bars an integral part of the design of the walls so that they are both strong and accessible at all points.

Millions find ways to own homes

By Lawrence Kilman
Associated Press writer

Rupert and Gillian Ingram owned a rambling, 90-year-old farmhouse near the Massachusetts coast and loved its spaciousness, its white pine floors and its pervasive smell of woodsmoke and apples.

But their fuel bills were enormous, and upkeep was a headache. When their two girls grew up and moved out, the Ingrams, then in their 50s, decided they needed a house that better suited their needs.

They built their new home at the edge of a salt marsh, and they built it underground. Nestled into a hillside, it has 16 inches of sod on the roof.

But this is no rabbit hole. The rooms, though small, are open and airy, and the south wall is faced in glass. The waving marsh grass stretches for miles, and the majestic view gives the feeling of space the Ingrams craved.

The underground home has another benefit. In their farmhouse, their annual gas bill could reach $1,700. In their earth-sheltered, sun-warmed house near Newbury, Mass., the bill is zero.

What the Ingrams did, moving from the old homestead to a smaller, more easily managed home — is a housing trend of the 1980s as costs increase and the population ages.

But other shifts in American society are changing the American home as well. Only 4 percent of U.S. families now match the traditional nuclear pattern of working father, non-working mother and two kids. Single adults are pooling their resources to buy houses together rather than be confined forever to apartments.

More families have two wage earners, and some of them work at home. Growing numbers of baby boomers, already settled into comfortable surroundings, are now starting families and looking for ways to stretch their space. And with divorces commonplace, single parents are looking for good housing, too.

The 1970s was a good decade for buying a home, but the first half of the 1980s was bad. Sharply rising prices and mortgage rates kept many out of the market, especially young, first-time buyers.

Nevertheless, 64 percent of Americans own their own homes, and that includes millions of young families. In fact, 66 percent of 35- to 39-year-olds and 54 percent of 30- to 34-year-olds are homeowners. How do they do it?

Second incomes are an increasingly important facto in financing home ownership. Smaller homes, unconventional designs, inventive financing and do-it-yourself renovations on older houses are among the ways Americans are making home ownership affordable.

"At least half of those people who are going to be turning age 30 are going to have to find innovative ways to buy houses," said Kenneth Rosen, a real estate analyst and business professor at the University of California at Berkeley.

"They're going to have to have a parent help them, they're going to have to share with someone else, buy a smaller house than they would have otherwise, live in a location they don't want to live in," he said.

An old-fashioned word like prudence also helps in these modern times.

Prudence, as in getting the most for your money. Don Metz, an architect in Lyme, N.H., makes today's compact houses seem larger by eliminating walls between rooms, devoting as little space as possible to hallways and using big windows to bring the outdoors inside.

Prudence, as in demanding energy efficiency. The Ingrams, for example, rely on sunlight and a wood stove to heat their house. They have yet to use their furnace. "Even unsophisticatd buyers are going to ask, 'How much insulation is in the roof?' and they'll want double-pane windows," said Metz.

For many people, making homes affordable means abandoning such middle-class standards as big backyards and formal living and dining rooms, those remnants of the Victorian parlor that are too good for daily family use.

When housing was less expensive, families insisted on living rooms, even though most of their daily activities occurred in family rooms or dens. They wanted dining rooms, but they ate in the kitchen. Such duplication is unaffordable today, and rooms are generally given multiple uses.

High construction costs have also sparked a boom in the home improvement market, because more people are buying old houses and renovating, or they're building additions to homes they own. The home improvement market topped $69 billion in 1984, and more than $38 billion belonged to the do-it-yourself segment.

That segment is growing because of people like Linda Helfet and Bill Hilliker, whose seven-room, 102-year-old house seemed to get smaller as their two children grew. The family joined the carpenters in building an addition. "The boys and I learned so much," said Ms. Helfet. "There were things we would have never begun because we didn't think we could finish it. We learned you can do anything if you just begin."

They bought the house for $38,000 a decade ago. The addition cost $41,000 and gave them a garage, a second bathroom, family room and office work space.

Financial arrangements are also changing. One of the newest ways to finance a house is through a joint ownership agreement, recently made available in all states, where parents buy part of their childrens' house and rent it back to them. The children have smaller monthly payments; the parents get a depreciation tax deduction.

About one-third of first-time home buyers get help from their parents anyway, so the new mortgage has a ready-made market, said Rosen, who developed the program.

Of course, other factors besides money are changing in the American home. The growth of non-traditional families has also spurred new ideas.

When the Minneapolis College of Art and Design announced "A New American House" design competition last year, 346 architects submitted drawings.

"Three ideas defined the competition," said its director, Harvey Sherman. "The dramatic change in households not made up of nuclear families, the high cost of housing, and the growing trend of people working at home."

Architects were asked to design six attached houses of 1,000 square feet each with a carport or garage and an office or work space for every unit.

Depreciation will provide an investment shelter

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr Frankel:

I have just sent my tax return to the IRS. My taxes were lower than I had expected, and my accountant explained the decrease by attributing it to depreciation on a real estate investment. Would you explain how this works.

L.V., Boston

Dear L.V.:

The theory of depreciation assumes that all property is wearing out; becoming obsolete or less desirable with the passage of time.

Ordinarily, you must spend or lose a dollar in order to deduct a dollar from your taxes. Depreciation is deductible, however, even though your property may be holding or increasing in value.

If the depreciation you deduct is equal to the decline in the value of your investment, you haven't gained anything — you've just been allowed a tax deduction for actual loss. But if you invest in something that will give you a depreciation deduction larger than the actual loss, you are ahead of the game.

Depreciation is allowed to owners of property used in a business or held for investment purposes. You may not depreciate your personal residence or your family car, but you may depreciate an identical house or vehicle bought as an investment. Depreciation is not allowed on land because land does not wear out, at least as far as the tax law is concerned.

Depreciation is also allowed on equipment and other tangible personal property which has an assumed life of more than 12 months and is therefore considered to be a capital asset. Business property having a life of less than a year is "expensed" — that is, deducted in full in the year purchased. The cost of a piece of equipment for the same office, let's say a typewriter, is "capitalized" — that is, its cost is deducted (depreciated) over a number of years.

The ideal situation is to have tax deduction without having to spend any money. For example, if you own a building, the taxable income is the total rent less the deductible expenses. The deductible expenses are such items as real estate taxes, fuel bills, salaries to employees, light bulbs and depreciation. While the first four items mentioned may be deductible, they also cost you money; they reduce your cash flow as they reduce your taxable income. In addition, your taxable income is reduced by the amount of the depreciation.

For example, if rents are $10,000 and cash expenses are $10,000, the cash flow is $0. However, if you have $5,000 in depreciation to deduct, you will incure a loss of $5,000. The $5,000 loss is deductible against your other income, thereby creating a shelter.

But if rents are $15,000 and cash expenses are $10,000, a cash distribution of $5,000 is generated. In this case, the depreciation offsets the cash distribution and makes it tax free.

Depreciation can provide a shelter for the profit from your investment. To the extent that it exceeds the profits, it is available to shelter your other income.

Six area skaters DCL All-Stars

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

Nearly half of the members of the Dual County League All-Star team came from Acton-Boxboro and Lincoln-Sudbury this season, as those two teams dominated most of the other clubs in the league. Surprisingly, Concord-Carlisle and Boston Latin, the two other clubs in the upper echelon of the league, had only two selections each on the 21-member team.

Newton South and Weston were well-represented, with three players apiece. Judd Cohen, Dan Monbouquette and Tom McGary made the team from South, while Jim Macdonald, Ron Watson and Kevin Chin represented the Wildcats.

A-B and L-S each put five players on the team. The league-champion Colonials dominated the forward picks, with four scorers being chosen. L-S wasn't far behind in that category, with three.

The Colonial forwards included Eric Lopez, Scott Louder, Rocky Reeves and Chris Patrick. L-S' picks were Bob Tracey, Rick Robinson and John Dolan.

The defensive choices were much more dispersed. Six blueliners were chosen, and they came from six different teams. Every team but Bedford was represented. The Buccaneers were the only team in the league to have only one player named. Goalie Tim Murray carried the standard for them. Lincoln-Sudbury's Marc Treadwell was the other goalie chosen.

The area stars:

Jim Macdonald — Weston coach Jim Gunn called this junior "the backbone of our defense." Macdonald had to have a lot of stamina this year, because the coach "had him on the ice as much as I could."

In addition to playing a regular shift, and sometimes an extra one, he was a key member of both the power-play and penalty-killing units.

At 5-11, Macdonald isn't any bruiser, but he knows how to use his size in front of the net. Not many opposing forwards had the luxury of setting up in front when he was in the neighborhood.

"It was difficult for other teams to get around him," said Gunn.

Adept at skating the puck out of the zone, Macdonald would often just keep on going until he reached the other team's net. He knew when to rush and when to stay back, however, and should be one of the top defensemen in the DCL next year. Macdonald also plays soccer in the fall.

Ron Watson — This sniper was Weston's only senior, and he provided that leadership that being in that position requires. He led the club in scoring with 25 goals and 27 assists for 52 points. A 220-pounder, Watson also provided some size up front, a quality Weston was lacking just about everywhere.

More importantly, Watson learned to play under control this season.

"He stayed out of the box this year," said Gunn. "We're very proud of that. He showed the team respect. He was out of the box and we weren't shorthanded as often."

Despite his knack for putting the puck in the net, the team captain's best sport is probably baseball. He's a catcher for Cliff Wilson's squad in the spring, and will probably continue his diamond exploits at Florida's Eckard College, a well-known baseball school, next year. Watson also performed on the gridiron for the Wildcats last fall.

Kevin Chin — This junior doesn't have the size of a Watson, but he makes up for it with speed and puck-handling ability. Chin was the quickest skater the Wildcats had with the puck.

"We relied heavily on him to put the goals in," said Gunn. "He's a get-the-job-done kind of person. He knows what he has to do and plays the game the way it should be played."

Chin also plays soccer, and should be a top scorer for both clubs as a senior.

Judd Cohen — This four-year starter at Newton South was a very steady player. Despite playing most of the season with a foot injury, he "just went out and did his job," according to Coach Charlie Rezzuti. "He wasn't able to perform up to his capabilities but didn't lose any of his desire."

Cohen scored six goals and added 11 assists from his defensive post, but perhaps the most impressive thing of all about this senior was his physical play.

"I didn't see anybody who hit as hard as he did," Rezzuti said.

Cohen is no stranger to All-Star teams. This is his second nomination for hockey, and was cited in baseball as a catcher last spring. He won the Lions' 110 Percent Award this winter. Among Cohen's college possibilities is Union College.

Dan Monbouquette — Another two-year All-Star, Monbouquette will have a chance to try for three as a senior. He led the Lions in scoring with 11 goals and 14 assists for 25 points. Though he can put the puck in the net, Monbouquette's best feature is his hustle.

"He's a fireball out there," Rezzuti praised. "He skates up and down his wing with no regard for his body. He flies into the corners. ... He can fire us up. He doesn't let anything bother him, he just wants that puck."

The junior was recently elected captain for next winter. He plays both baseball and football.

Tom McGary — The senior co-captain did it all for the Lions, from killing penalties to playing on the power play, not to mention his regular shift. He managed to find time to finish second on the club in scoring with 10-13-23.

A bunch of those points came in the last few games of the season, when McGary really came on. He scored four goals against Wayland, including one in the last minute of the game to tie it up, playing "one of the best games I've ever seen," said Rezzuti.

"He's big and strong and has an excellent shot," the coach said. "He's a good team leader."

The right wing, who pitches for the baseball team, hasn't made a decision on college yet.

The All-Stars:

Newton South-Forward Dan Monbouquette, forward Tom McGary, defenseman Judd Cohen.

Weston-Forward Ron Watson, forward Kevin Chin, defenseman Jim Macdonald.

Acton-Boxboro-Forward Eric Lopez, forward Scott Louder, forward Rocky Reeves, forward Chris Patrick, defenseman Ted Crowley.

Bedford-Goalie Tim Murray.

Lancer five will need marksmen

Jeff Sherman is one of those once-in-a-decade (if that) type of players, so it's only fitting that in his senior year, Newton Catholic had the best basketball record in school history at 19-4.

The best of Coach Don Dabenigno's five seasons saw the Lancers advance all the way to the North semifinals before being ousted by Matignon.

As to Sherman, to say he'll be missed is to say the Mets kind of like the idea of having Dwight Gooden around. He capped a tremendous career with a record-setting year.

Sherman virtually tore up the Newton Catholic record book and authored a new one, with himself in the starring role. No fewer than 16 individual marks now belong to him, including six for a career, four for a season and six for a game. The career marks are points, field goals made, field goals attempted, free throws made, free throws attempted and rebounds. Led by Sherman, the team set six game and 10 season marks.

With 1152 career points, the captain is not only the school's leading scorer, he's the only one ever to top 1,000 points. Against the best competition, in the tournament, he averaged 25.2 points, including 37 in the loss to Matignon.

Though Sherman is far and away the biggest loss, four other seniors will be gone via graduation. They include starters Kevin Walsh and Mark Pulsifer.

Walsh was one of Newton's top clutch players, especially at the foul line. Pulsifer keyed several victories with strong inside play. When he was controlling the middle, teams couldn't afford to overplay Sherman, which opened up all sorts of possibilities.

The other two seniors on the way out are Scott Roberts and Dave Arsenault.

That still leaves the Lancers with experience at a couple of spots.

Mike Donnellan developed into a solid point guard this season. In fact, the coach called him "the best point I've coached at Newton Catholic. He sacrificed a lot of personal stats to get the ball to the scorers."

Next year Donnellan will have to take a more aggressive role in the scoring department. He showed a good shot in his time with the junior varsity the previous season, and he'll have to revert back to that form if the Lancers are to be successful.

"We're going to have to see him shoot with the confidence he had on the jayvees as a sophomore," Dabenigno said. "We'll need some outside scoring. He lacked confidence this year."

Inside, the Lancers will look to Kurt Kiessling, who came on very strong at the end of his junior season. Coming off a leg injury, he got off to a slow start this season, but by tournament time, he had pushed his way into the lineup in a major way.

The 6-2 leaper averaged in double figures throughout the tournament, and developed into a strong defensive player inside as well. The Lancers won't be a big team next year, so Kiessling will probably have to move into the center position.

One of the leading candidates to take a forward job is John Canning. The 6-0 junior had consistency problems this season, playing very well at times, and at others he "took himself out of it," in the words of the coach.

Thanks to the Lancers' depth up front, Canning could afford a year of learning. Next season, however, he has to step in and show more dependability. He's shown he can take the ball to the hoop. In fact, he can score from outside as well. He could even play the off-guard if there's a shortage of candidates back there.

If he does stay up front, the coach feels Canning will have to develop "some intensity inside," particularly on defense.

Joining the crowded forward field is Steve Hennessey. The junior was ineligible most of this year, but showed himself to be extremely tough inside during practice. At 6-1, his nose for the ball could make him a top rebounder next winter.

Junior Tom Walsh is another forward who didn't see much action this winter, but could be ready to step forward as a senior. Walsh's forte is defense. He has to work on the offensive part of his game, but has the quickness to make it go.

One other player who could force his way into contention up front is Steve Perruzzi. Though he played for the junior varsity for almost the entire season, he showed some offensive potential in a brief varsity stint. He could fill that shooting forward role, though his defensive needs work.

The number one guard candidate is Joe McLaughlin, who ran the point for the jayvees. It may take him some time to adjust to the much faster pace of the varsity, but if McLaughlin can make that adjustment, he'll contribute next winter.

It may be impossible for the Lancers to repeat the kind of season they had this year, but Dabenigno isn't ready to call next winter a rebuilding year.

"We're going to surprise some people next year," he said. Kiessling will be one of the tough players in the league inside, and Donnellan is a proven point guard."

The coach does warn that "we need to shoot a lot better from the floor than we did this year. Only one player shot over 50 percent from the floor, and only two shot over 60 percent from the foul line."

If there's a slippage by NC, there won't be any lack of teams trying to step over them on their way to the top. St. Clement's didn't have a senior on the team, and returns the leagues' number two scorer in Jim Cataldo. St. Patrick's is on track for a big year, led by guard John Lawn, another of the league's sharpshooters. In addition, league champ North Cambridge Catholic returns with its backcourt intact, ready for another run at the top.

Newton man remembers The Babe and others

Aronson knew the legends

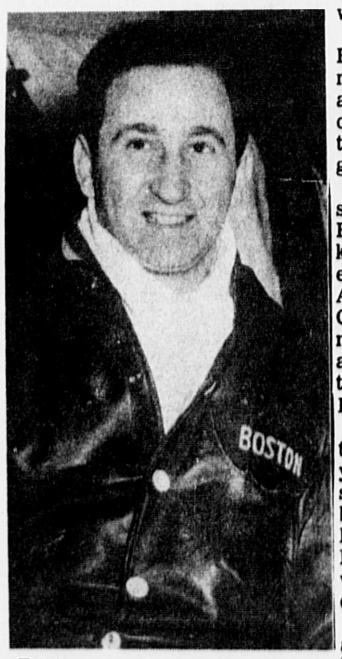

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — To some, the good old days were simply a boyish Carl Yastrzemski, a hard-skating Johnny Bucyk, or a 20 points-per-game John Havlicek. But to Newton's Ed Aronson, the good old days were Rogers Hornsby, Eddie Shore, and Walter Brown.

The 69-year-old Aronson, now keeping busy as freshman basketball coach at Newton South High School, knew them all. Starting with his childhood days as bat boy for the old Boston Braves, through his years as trainer for the Boston Olympics hockey team, and finally as a handyman with the Bruins and Celtics, Aronson has brushed with some of the great legends in sports history.

There was Hornsby, Babe Ruth, and Casey Stengel. There was Shore, Dit Clapper, and Tiny Thompson. There was Brown, Bob Cousy, and Ed Macauley. The memories will last forever.

"I remember something about Eddie Shore," Aronson begins, the juices just starting to flow. "He was a finicky player. Everything had to be just right. Well, Eddie used to complain a lot about his skates, and in those days the Bruins played at the Garden but the skate sharpener was over at the old Boston Arena. So everytime the skates went bad in the middle of a game we had to go all the way over to the Arena to have them fixed.

"What we used to do with Eddie is we'd send someone down to the lobby of the Garden and he'd wait there with the skates for awhile. The guy would sit there for maybe 10 minutes and then he'd bring the skates back up. Eddie never noticed that we hadn't sharpened them."

The conversation takes a turn towards baseball, and of Aronson's early days hauling bats for his idols.

"Paul Waner was a great hitter for the Pittsburgh Pirates and I remember one day they were playing in Boston, and in those days the bats were shipped straight from Louisville. Well, Woody Jensen of the Pirates was bitching and moaning because his bats didn't come, so Waner said 'I'll show you,' and he took four different bats and went four-for-four."

Aronson remembers opening day 1935, with Ruth starting in left field for the Braves. That's fine; the only problem was Ruth never finished the game.

"Babe Ruth used to like to leave the park a little early to avoid the ballpark traffic," says Aronson. "So when the eighth inning started and the Braves took the field, there was no left fielder."

Stengel managed the Braves for a few years in the late '30s and, as Aronson remembers, he was an awful coach.

"He was a terrible manager. He was a great clubhouse manager — he could sit around and talk and make sense — but once they took the field he was terrible. I mean, he'd be taking guys out in the middle of innings.

"Well, Dave Egan used to write sports for the old Boston Daily Record, and he was a real knocker. He used to rap everyone, but he was funny," Aronson continues. "One day, Casey got hit by a car on Commonwealth Ave. and Egan wrote a story honoring the driver as the the guy who did the most for Boston baseball that year."

Aronson became bat boy for the Braves in 1929 when he was 12 years old after getting to know several of the players. He had become such a regular around Braves Field that trainer Jimmy Neary one day asked him if he would like the job. A childhood dream come true.

"I lived on Babcock Street and at the end of the road was Braves Field," Aronson recalls. "I used to go down there and hang around and I got to know the players. In those days, you could just walk up and talk to them. It was altogether different."

Except for three years in the army, Aronson stayed with the Braves until 1953 when they moved to Milwaukee. By that time, Aronson had already been working as a trainer for the Boston Olympics and was doing odds and ends for the Bruins and Celtics.

"You couldn't live off just one job," he says.

When the Braves left Boston, Aronson hung around the sports scene for a few more years until Garden General Manager and Celtic owner Brown died in the late '50s.

He became involved in local sports in Newton, serving as president of both the Newton South Little League and the Newton AA Basketball League. In 1974, he founded and formed the Newton South High Boosters Club, then bowed out of sports for close to 10 years.

Joins Lion staff

How Aronson got his current job at South High, coaching the freshman boys' hoop team, is similar to how he got his first job as Braves bat boy.

Aronson's son Mark was the coach for the South junior varsity basketball team, and the elder Aronson used to follow his son's team. He got to know varsity coach Joe Killilea, and the rest is pure luck.

Mark took the girls' varsity coaching job in 1982, and Killilea needed both a JV and a freshman coach for his boys.

"I was talking to Joe one day about finding a new coach and my father's name came up. He seemed like a natural choice. He was always around and he knew the program."

Despite never having coached basketball, or even played the game for that matter, the elder Aronson led his young Lions to a 9-7 season his first time out. The next year, Newton South lost only four in 10 tries, beating first-place Brookline along the way. This past winter, Aronson's Lions went 12-2.

"I'm not a great coach. I'm just available," says Aronson, a former football captain and second baseman-pitcher with Brookline High. "It's fun. I like being around the kids because it keeps me young. I get along with the kids and I know what Joe Killilea expects, so there's no one bothering me.'

Mark keeps a close eye on his father, critiquing his work and offering pointers along the way. In return, the father gives coaching sugestions to the son. The two don't always agree.

"He yells at officials too much," Mark says of his father's technique. "That's a trait of an awful lot of new coaches."

Ed comes back with, "I don't yell at officials anymore. Sure, I'm a vocal coach, but it keeps the kids awake and it keeps you in the game."

Although Ed Aronson's first exposure to basketball wasn't until he was a young man hanging around the Celtics (Brookline High didn't pick up a hoop program until his senior year), he has learned a lot in his short time as a coach.

"I've gotten better as a coach," he admits. "One of the biggest problems was adjusting to the kids. Freshman boys are still babies. They're all good shooters but they don't play defense. You've got to teach them the basics."

Parents can be a problem too, says Aronson.

"Parents are tough, but most of them are okay. They all think they've got Larry Bird for a son."

Larry Bird? He will be remembered a few years from now as part of the good old days, but for now, Ed Aronson will take Hornsby, Shore, and Brown.

"I could write a book on my experiences," Aronson concludes. "You name 'em, I knew 'em."

Senior golf schedule set in New England

The NEPGA will inaugurate a competitive schedule for its senior members. There will be approximately a dozen tournaments this coming season.

Most will be best-ball-of-four format. Senior pros will be handicapped by ability and will use their handicap in both the best ball and individual competition. Tournaments will be held in Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

Bob Crowley of Pine Brook CC is the president of the Senior organization. Ray Lajoie of Worcester CC is is secretary-treasurer. Bill Barclay will serve as handicap chairman, and Ken Campbell of Newton Commonwealth will be chairman of the Tournament Committee. Cathleen Beach will be tournament co-ordinator.

White, Burke award recipients at Cushing

Bob White and John Burke, both of Newton, were the recipients of post season awards at Cushing Academy for their participation in ice hockey this past winter.

White was given the Sportsmanship Award at a recent awards ceremony. He scored 12 goals and 17 assists to help the squad compile a 20-4-1 record. Bob is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. White of 4 St. James Ter.

Burke, a junior goalie, received the Most Improved Player Award. He finished the year with a 2.36 goals against average. Johnis the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard M. Burke of 29 Richmond Rd.

Rec swimmers recapture crown

Newton Recreation Swim Team regained its A Division championship Saturday at the Acton-Boxboro Regional pool by nosing out the host team by 12 points. Newton scored 838 and Acton 826.

Newton won the title in 1983 and 1984, but was beaten out by Acton last year. Last Saturday, Newton hd a 30-point lead going into the relays, but Acton was seeded first in every relay but two. Newton swam very well an unseeded Acton enough to win the meet.

The Newton boys' 15-18 relay team, comprised of Tim Troiano, Bob Greene, Jim Robertson and Adam Murphy, won in 1:34.41 over the 200-yard distance to establish both a team and league record.

Work ahead for Tiger cagers

It's becoming more and more difficult to envision the Suburban League in anything but a two-team race in basketball, but Newton North coach Jerry Phillips would like to see his players put themselves into a position to challenge Brockton and Cambridge Rindge and Latin next winter.

Phillips doesn't think that's impossible, but he acknowledges there is a price attached.

"We have some excellent ballplayers coming back," he said. "The potential is there. We see some real fine quality coming up."

Then comes the but.

"It all depends on how they work over the summer. Brockton and Cambridge will be at the top again, and we have to have a real good offseason to compete with them. If we don't, we'll be back in the pack again."

The coach went on to warn that his players can't pick up a basketball the day after Thanksgiving and expect to win in perhaps the toughest basketball league in the state.

Last year at least one player heard those words of warning and it made him an All-Star. Andy Lockwood worked throughout the offseason, both on his basketball skills and strength. He made himself into a better player, becoming "almost unstoppable," down low, according to Phillips.

Losing a player who averaged 17 points and 10 rebounds a game obviously makes extra work for a coach. Filling his shoes will be one of Phillips' top priorities when the Tigers report next winter.

All told, five seniors will be missing. Guards Jim Giddon and Ed O'Brien also saw a lot of action, while Gary Anderson and Jacques Rousseau round out the graduating group.

But there are just as many players coming back as leaving, and that, combined with the junior varsity talent, is what has Phillips encouraged.

The North starting lineup was in flux much of the past season, and that may pay off next winter, as quite a few underclassmen saw playing time.

Neil Hatem is one good example, as he split a starting role with Ed O'Brien at the point guard post. The two were so close in ability that Phillips felt equally comfortable with either one, and next winter Hatem should be able to handle the post alone, provided he puts in that work over the summer that the coach referred to.

Another returning starter is Jeff Swett. The junior was expected to start from day one this year, but nagging injuries kept him out of the lineup for the first couple of weeks. He never really hit his stride, but if he's healthy Phillips is counting on him for some offensive punch next year. Swett, a small forward, is one of the top outside shooters on the team.

Hatem and Swett have been elected co-captains for next year's club, and Phillips is counting on them to set an example, starting immediately.

Drew Dixon is only a sophomore, but he forced his way into the lineup this year with ability and court sense unusual in a player so young.

The coach calls the 6-2 forward "an unbelievable streak shooter." His leaping ability and moves make him an inside threat, though he could do with a little more bulk, especially for the defensive end.

Dixon will be a top threat inside for the Tigers next season, but Phillips would like to see him work on his strength to complement his quickness.

"He knows what he has to do," said the coach.

Another part-time starter was Andy Mirken. Usually the first man off the bench, Mirken was thrust into a starting role on several occasions due to injury and illness.

Nobody connected with the North program has any doubt about Mirken's raw ability. In fact, Phillips called him "probably the best shooter on the team."

However, the off-guard had a problem with consistency this season. The coach thought his shot selection left something to be desired at times, but feels "with a little more maturity and court savvy he could be a real darkhorse for us next year."

Mirken sees the floor very well, and could fill in at the point if needed.

Two players who were up with the varsity at the beginning of the season were Terron Tyler and Ted Rooney.

Tyler showed he could play with the big club, but Phillips wanted to get him more minutes on the junior varsity. Only a freshman, he's capable of playing either guard spot and should push both Hatem and Mirken for a starting post.

"He has the talent to play either one," stressed Phillips. Tyler is 5-11, but his leaping ability enables him to match up well against taller foes.

Sophomore Rooney also started the year with the varsity. The 6-0 forward is a good wing shooter who knows what to do with the ball when he gets it. He'll be vying for the small forward post.

What the Tigers could use more than anything else is a big man, either someone who develops within the ranks or someone who comes out of the woodwork.

The leading candidate at this early juncture is John Apholt, who saw limited action with the varsity this year.

"We see improvement," said the coach of the 6-3 junior. "We think he can help us next year. He has to develop some moves underneath and develop on defense."

The Tigers will be bolstered by a sophomore class that could be one of the best in a long time at the school. In fact, Apholt's stiffest challenge should come from 6-4 sophomore center Darren Toon. Classmate Dave Brooks is just a bit shorter, and will be in the fight up front.

Joining the battle for playing time will be two other sophs, guard Robert Wilkinson and forward John Silk, both 6-3.

Marcus gets clutch hit in Bentley win

WALTHAM — Bentley College baseballers got the season off to an auspicious start Saturday thanks to a timely single by Newton's Jerry Marcus in the first game and a two-hit pitching masterpiece by Needham's Steve Alperin in the nightcap.

The Falcons swept a doubleheader from Bowdoin College, 12-11 and 4-0, at Bentley Athletic Field as Coach Bob DeFelice launched his 17th campaign on a winning note.

Bentley went into the bottom of the final and seventh inning of the lidlifter, trailing 10-11. Freshman Jim Blackburn (North Grafton) reached on an error by the second baseman to get things started. He went to third when Mike DeMarco (Somerville) singled up the middle. DeMarco stole second, and when the catcher's throw sailed into centerfield, Blackburn raced home with the tying run.

a groundout, Marcus singled to right center to drive in the winning run. It was the second hit and RBI for the former Newton South High School standout.

Jerry Marcus

Tom McHugh, a junior righthander from Amherst, was credited with the mound victory. He hurled three innings of scoreless ball. Phil Wiemer started on the knoll was knocked out in the third inning after having control troubles. Bowdoin forged ahead with a seven-run rally in that frame.

Alperin was in complete charge in the second game. Displaying excellent control, the junior southpaw notched his first career shutout at Bentley, by allowing singles in the second and sixth innings. He walked three and struck out one batter.

Bentley got what proved to be the winning run on three successive errors in the third inning. Mike Connelly (West Roxbury) reached on a throwing error and came around on two consecutive miscues. Both Connelly and Marcus had RBI singles in the game.

Community Center tourney winner as Larts swishes 18

TAUNTON — Shawn Larts fired in 18 points and Ron Coppola and Dan Domeniconi added 14 apiece as the Newton Community Center routed the Taunton Running Rebels, 73-31, in the first round of the Taunton Boys' Club Basketball Tournament on Sunday.

Newton put this one away early, running up an 18-5 lead after only a period of play. By halftime the lead was 17, and Newton had stretched it out to 52-22 by the end of the third quarter.

Jeff Sherman chipped in 10 for the winners. Other scorers included Britt Ryan (nine), Andy Lockwood (six) and Rusty Halloran (two).

Neighborhood group elects 1986 officers

NEWTON — At the intial 1986 meeting of the Newton Neighborhood Network the new executive committee took office.

As a result of her election to the board of alderman, co-founder of N.N.N. Polly Bryson has resigned as co-chairman and has become a member of the executive committee in the office of immediate past co-chairman.

The meeting held at the First Baptist Church, Newton Centre, was hosted by the Newton Centre Neighborhood Association and was well attended. There were representatives from nearly all of N.N.N.'s city-wide membership.

Peter Harrington, a member of the Zoning Review Committee, presented a report on the recommendations of his committee and also helped clarify its diverse aspects including the implementation process and the opportunity for community involvement.

The most important part of the meeting came with the discussion of the village study meetings when members of N.N.N. reported the concerns and shared with us some suggestions to help make future meetings more productive.

Also, after some preliminary discussions, N.N.N. plans to meet with some other surrounding town's neighborhood coalition groups, to share mutual concerns.

Because of the complexities and the importance of the ZRC report and the village study, N.N.N. plans to have a monitoring group to help insure that the work of these two committees be communicated to the neighborhoods, reflecting neighborhood concerns.

Pianist attributes success to God

By Michael Goldsmith

MARRAKECH, Morocco (AP) — Jimmy McKissic attributes his success as a pianist to divine intervention. Whenever he has a problem, he writes a letter to God.

And when the problem is really urgent, like when he had to choose a program for his solo concert at Carnegie Hall last month, he sends God a telex message. As a result, he says, "the Holy Spirit works through my fingers."

For the past 18 months, James H. McKissic has drawn jet-set crowds to the leather-lined bar of the Mamounia Hotel, where Winston Churchill used to paint the snowcapped Atlas Mountains overlooking Marrakech.

The musician's father, the Rev. James McKissic, is a Baptist minister in Pine Bluff, Ark., who does not fully approve of his direct communication with God. However, the musician is convinced it works.

His Feb. 18 concert at Carnegie Hall was the culmination of a lifelong dream. New York Times music critic Bernard Holland praised McKissic's rendering of Schumann's "Carnaval," Chopin's B flat minor Sonata and five Debussy Preludes as a display of "confidence, subtlety and an unusually vivid imagination ... the work of an authentic pianist."

Yet McKissic's impresario, William Morton, originally wanted him to play popular music and spirituals because he didn't think McKissic, a virtually unknown performer, could draw enough crowds to break even with an all-classical program. However, McKissic wanted to be recognized as a "serious pianist."

"So I wrote to Jesus and taped the letter over my bed, as I usually do," he said. "If the letter falls down during the night, I know He agrees. And it did."

That particular letter is like a sacred relic to McKissic: "Our Savior, Jesus Christ, will you please touch Bill's (Morton's) heart and give me the strength and courage to tell him I don't want to play pop music in Carnegie Hall," it said.

He followed it up with a telex to God, also taped over his bed. Morton eventually relented and allowed McKissic to choose his own program. More than 2,400 people attended the concert, and Morton broke even.

In 1983, McKissic had written directly to Carnegie Hall asking to play there. Assistant Managing Director John Baskid sent a polite refusal, explaining, "you are almost completely unknown in this country, which is a serious consideration for us."

So McKissic pinned a letter over his bed asking Jesus to intervene. The following day, he said, Morton walked into the Mamounia bar, took an immediate interest in his playing and offered to hire Carnegie Hall for the pianist.

McKissic first learned how to play piano from his mother 42 years ago when he was 3 years old. A naturally gifted musician, he won a music degree from the University of Arkansas in Pine Bluff and went on to study, teach and perform in Berkeley, Calif., and in Geneva, Switzerland.

In 1984, he found his way to the Mamounia. There, in Morocco's picturesque winter capital, he plays to government ministers, diplomats and wealthy tourists in the plush Churchill bar where they still treasure the ashtray the British statesman used to stub out his cigars.

McKissic plays every night, as late as anyone is left in the bar to listen. The sophisticated audience continuously applauds his renderings of popular and serious music, sometimes including his own compositions, all played without scores.

He sings, too, but he said, "God has blessed me with the insight to realize I don't have a voice."

He cheerfully greets customers as they walk in, then wishes God's blessing on them when they leave. Women are addressed as "angels." The customers love it, and assistant hotel manager Mohamed Hammouti says no musician in the Mamounia has ever been as popular.

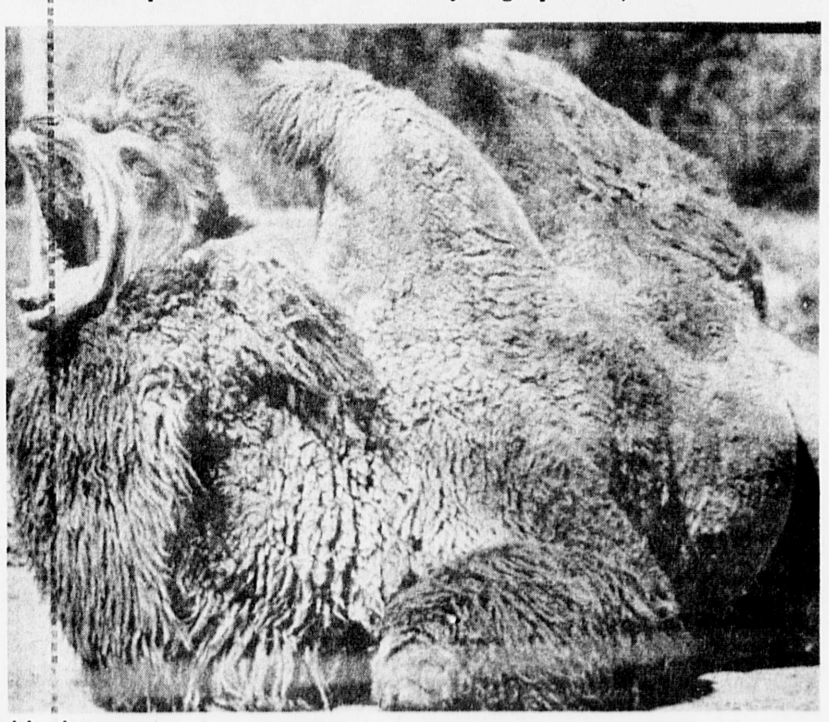

McKissic, who is black, tends to keep away from jazz and spirituals. He says he has no race consciousness and feels no emotional tie to a black musical tradition. He describes classical music as his "real love, after Jesus."

The Mamounia is closing for renovation this summer. McKissic, who has lived abroad for most of the past two decades, regards it as a sign from above that it's time for him to go home.

"I'm ready for America now," he said. "Thanks to an omniscient Higher Power, I now know who I am. I'd like to relax and compose my own music, maybe play in a concert once every couple of months. Ultimately, I'd like to have my own family, and try to teach them all about love."

In his free time, he is busy writing a piano concerto. This has given him a new ambition: He plans to ask Jesus to be allowed to give the first public performance of the concerto in Carnegie Hall, accompanied by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

"If you love the Lord enough, everything is possible," said McKissic.

Money growing on laughs

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — At least 5,000 telephone pledges a day are still rolling in for "Comic Relief," the televised benefit which has raised $2.4 million to aid the homeless in 18 cities, its creator said.

Included in the figure was $2.1 million in telephone pledges; $345,000 for ticket sales at Universal Amphitheater, where the event was staged; and $18,000 for programs and promotional materials sold at the amphitheater, said Bob Zmuda, president of the non-profit Comic Relief Inc.

Comic Relief has yet to count mailed-in donations and contributions from comedy night clubs which staged related benefits, Zmuda said Tuesday.

He said the show's success spurred plans for an album, videocassette and book about the event.

The money should be distributed beginning in three to four months, said Dennis Albaugh, vice president of Comic Relief.

The Community Medicine Division of St. Vincent's Hospital in New York City will work with Comic Relief directors to seek requests for proposals from each of the 18 city health care projects involved, then review the requests and decide on distribution of funds, Albaugh explained.

Home Box Office, which broadcast Saturday's show starring Robin Williams, Whoopi Goldberg, Billy Crystal and dozens of other comedians, donated more than $1 million for production costs and overhead, said HBO senior vice president Chris Albrecht.

HBO agreed to let local cable companies carry HBO's signal on a free channel, increasing the show's potential audience from 14.5 million homes to 39 million. Pledges were made chiefly over a special 500-line phone bank set up with a toll-free number.

Albrecht said HBO will rebroadcast a two-part edited version of the show during April.

Comic Relief came on the heels of several fund-raisers, including the record "We Are the World," the Live-Aid concert for African famine relief and the FarmAid concert for America's struggling farmers.

The show offered humor for a broad spectrum of tastes, ranging from the down-home style of Minnie Pearl, with a pricetag on her hat, to Pee Wee Herman. Other comics included Steve Allen, Jerry Lewis, Madeline Kahn, John Candy, David Steinberg, Buddy Hackett, Joe Piscopo, Gilda Radner, Carl Reiner, Sid Caesar and Henny Youngman.

Money raised by viewer pledges will be disbursed to Health Care for the Homeless projects in Albuquerque, Baltimore, Birmingham, Ala.; Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Denver, Detroit, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Nashville, Tenn.; New York; Philadelphia; Phoenix, Ariz.; San Antonio, Texas; San Francisco, Seattle and Washington, D.C.

The runners are coming

Police expect crowd of one million fans

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A battalion of public safety officers will be charged with controlling the nearly one million visitors coming here next Monday to cheer runners on as they discover why part of Commonwealth Avenue is known as "Heartbreak Hill."

"We will have a lot of extra officers on detail," Police Capt. John Bartinelli says. "Because of the quality of the field, we are expecting close to one million people on hand, depending on the weather."

To maintain control, Washington Street will be closed at 12:30 p.m. There will be about 75 Newton Police, 15 State Police, 15 Registry of Motor Vehicles Police, 110 National Guardsmen, 90 MDC Police, 20 Boston College Police, 10 MBTA Police, 18 Newton Auxiliary Police, Waltham Auxiliary Police and a group of Explorer Scouts on hand.

In addition, there will be five ambulances, a paramedic squad, an auxiliary rescue unit and seven Red Cross stations for runners and fans who need medical attention. Emergency rooms at NewtonWellsely, St. Elizabeth's and Waltham Hospitals will handling ambulance runs. Bartinelli says the race generates an average of 60 to 70 marathon-related ambulance runs.

Despite the fact that there are extra signs warning revelers that police will not tolerate alcohol use or open burning, there are always those who ingore them. One man familiar with the situation is Alderman Arthur Reilly, whose front door opens on Heartbreak Hill.

"One time, a station wagon pulled up and a family got out," he recalls. "They rolled out a blanket on the front lawn, opened up a picnic basket and made themselves comfortable. I strolled out, and asked them what they were doing there. 'Oh, we live here,' a man told me."

There are other stories. Reilly says last year,

Terror unit readied

Special police squad requests special ammo

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Garden City police unit charged with quelling terrorist attacks needs 10,000 rounds of .357 caliber "dum dum" hollow-point ammunition, Police Chief William Quinn told aldermen Monday night, just one hour after U.S. forces attacked Libya.

The timing of the appropriation request for the Civil Disorder Unit (CDU) was purely coincidental, coming during the annual budget review. The coincidence, however, was not lost on members of the aldermanic Public Safety and Transportation Committee, which tentatively approved the $21,000 outlay.

In addition to the ammunition, Quinn requested one "Body Bunker" bulletproof forward shield, three Remington Vermet model 700 rifles, five "Second Chance" assault-type bulletproof vests, four one-man bulletproof shields and assorted combat-type garments.

"The CDU is an offshoot of the old Tactical Police Force," CDU commander Frank Gorgone said. "They were used as a special weapons team during the riots of the late 60s and early 70s when they were sent 27 times to Harvard Square. The CDU will be used to repel terrorist attacks, as well as handle barricade situations, bank holdups and hostage negotiations."

The 18-man unit will be made up of patrol officers with special skills such as sharpshooting and hostage negotiating. The men will carry their own equipment with them, work in five-man teams and be on call for emergency situations.

While the aldermen were generally supportive of Quinn's request, there were some questions raised, especially regarding the amount and type of ammunition.

"How long will 10,000 rounds last?" Alderman Louis Irwin asked. "Is this something that you will request again? Why do we need this?"

The dum dum bullets, which flatten upon impact

> 'How long will 10,000 rounds last? ... Why do we need this?'

and can make a hole in the body as large as a fist, are needed for "stopping power," Gorgone said.

He also explained that, with officers required to train monthly at the state shooting range, 10,000 rounds will probably last only one year if no emergency situations arise. He added that while the team lacked some equipment, "It is ready to go right now if needed."

During the meeting, aldermen were discussing breaking news of the US bombing of Libyan terrorist bases as well as the appropriations. The combination made for some gallows humor.

"If you get the 10,000 rounds," Alderman Richard McGrath told Quinn, "you'll be able to outgun the Libyans."

The appropriation, which is a separately docketed item and not part of the budget review, will be considered by the Finance Committee before reaching the full board.

Police say:

Drug probe led to call girl ring

By David Weber
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — The investigation into an alleged prostitution ring based in West Newton and Watertown, which netted one arrest last week, began almost a month ago when Newton detectives received information that drugs were possibly being sold at the Endless Summer Suntanning Salon on Elm Street.

Although further investigation did not turn up any evidence of drug dealing, it did expose what police believe is an extensive call girl network, servicing the greater Boston area in hotels and private homes.

Commenting on the original drug allegations, Newton Police Detective Sgt. Arthur T. Fryar, who headed the investigation and interviewed a number of informants, said, "You just take what you have and start to look into it."

The owner of the tanning salon, 25-year-old Lauren F. Hawkes, who also operated a service called Boston's Best Escorts out of her Watertown home, was arrested last week and arraigned in Waltham District Court on charges of deriving support from prostitutes' earnings, procuring females for prostitution and illegal possession of a firearm.

Tuesday afternoon, at a pretrial conference, Hawkes asked that some of the tanning salon's business, which were confiscated by police, be returned to her. Some records were ordered to be returned, while some checks in question will be held.

She is free on $1,000 cash bail. Another pre-trial conference is set for May 7.

Using search warrants, detectives seized records suggesting that Hawkes ran a prostitution

New street paving process criticized

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A Ware Road woman Monday night used her daughter's shoe to demonstrate that some city roads are being rerouted into residents' homes.

Barbara Liebman held up the shoe of her seven-year old, 45-pound daughter to convince the Public Facilities Committee that the stoneseal process should not have been used to resurface her street.

A pebble-size piece of Ware Road was stuck to the sole. "As soon as it gets warm, it's going to soften," Liebman said of the stoneseal.

To stoneseal a road, workers spread a layer of liquid asphalt and then roll crush stone into it. Contractors used the process to resurface 61 of the city's streets in 1984 and 1985.

Liebman and several other residents argued the road surface still becomes gooey during hot weather and is tracked into their homes. They want the city to cover their streets with asphalt.

Former alderman Donald Budge said he has spent more than $2,000 to refinish and wood floors replace hall carpets damaged by stoneseal.

"I've lived in Newton for 20 years," said Ithaca Circle resident Donald Sweeney. "And I enjoyed it until two years ago."

Department of Public Works Commissioner James L. Hickey said he would first try applying stone dust, then consider adding asphalt if that did not solve the problems.

Rizzo hopes to remedy city's day care crunch

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — School Committee member Sally Rizzo recommends a city commission be formed to study and seek innovative ways to ease the day care crunch.

Many day care facilities have long waiting lists, which poses a difficult problem for two-career and single-family homes. While many parents have sought relief from the School Department on the issue, Rizzo said, "It's not just a school problem.

"This is a growing problem in the city and it's something the city needs to address," she said. "There is limited child care available to the growing number of families that need it, and I think the city has to respond to these economic and social changes."

Rizzo said she has received numerous letters and telephone calls from distressed parents.

"There are so many working families who call upon the schools to meet the needs of their children," she said. "I feel for these parents and the time has come for the city to respond to the demands."

Rizzo wants the proposed commission to tap as many city resources as possible in order to determine the needs and the solutions that would best answer the needs. The next step would be to find the funding and space for proposed city day care programs.

Rizzo said she hopes the proposed commission would be able to find innovative solutions to the problem by finding city buildings that could house additional programs.

School Committee member Sydra Schnipper supports Rizzo's recommendation. She said she thinks the committee will support it, too.

'Teen Aid' bridges troubled waters

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

CHESTNUT HILL — The Teen Aid rock-and-roll fundraiser began as a small project that ended up big.

So big that the Beaver Country Day School students who organized the fundraiser spurned the traditional high school gymnasium in favor of renting Boston's Metro club for their Sunday afternoon concert. They also cajoled radio station WBCN into both sponsoring the event and contributing free T-shirts and sold $4,000 worth of tickets before the doors even opened.

"We wanted a charity that would directly help teens," said Josh Tetrakoff, 17, of Newton, who conceived the Teen Aid idea. "The best part is we're going to be able to see things being done with the money for a new shelter. It will give runaway teens a place to stay and work out their problems until they get it together," he said.

Through Sunday's concert and other fundraisers, Terakoff and his cohorts have raised almost half of $10,000 needed to open a shelter for teens in Brighton. The shelter would be operated by Bridge Over Troubled Waters, a nonprofit agency offering a wide range of free counseling services to runaway teens.

Chief's zoning flap is not finished yet

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON - When the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) convenes for its May session, Newton resident Shirley Jaffe intends to press her complaint that Police Chief William Quinn's 1900 Washington St. house violates zoning.

The Building Department last week announced that it had found in favor of Quinn after reviewing new evidence from the chief's legal counsel.

That decision neither surprises nor displeases her, Jaffe said. Ultimately, it may help her win the larger battle of proving the city has selectively enforced its zoning code against her, said the Chestnut Hill resident and Newton landlord.

"I couldn't be more pleased with what they told you," said Jaffe. "If they had made Chief Quinn take out his third apartment, I would have been somewhat disappointed. It would've proven to me that I overestimated the way they selectively prosecute."

In July, Cambridge District Court found Jaffe and her husband, Leon, guilty of criminal zoning violations at their 58 Winthrop St. home.

Since then, Shirley Jaffe has mounted a campaign to prove zoning and building code violations are rampant in Newton. The Quinn building is one of more than 300 she has asked the city to investigate.

In a letter last week, Building Commissioner James W. Cameron determined Jaffe's most recent complaints lack the supporting documentation needed for his staff to conduct housing inspections.

The department has found many of her allegations of zoning and building code violations to be invalid after a complete investigation, his letter states.

"Your preparation of wholesale lists of addresses, which you admit contain properties which only in your opinion 'appear to violate the Newton zoning ordinance,' does not provide probable cause for the city to seek entry into and inspection of the listed properties," Cameron wrote.

Jaffe said she based those complaints on assessing records which show the number of dwelling units in a building. She compares those records to zoning requirements to determine if a building appears to have illegal apartments.

"I would still stick with the fact that the assessors are correct," Jaffe said. "Nobody pays taxes on what they haven't got."

She said she would go to the ZBA to contest Cameron's ruling that Quinn's building is a legal three-family dwelling in a single-family zone.

Evidence showed Quinn's building had three apartments before zoning was established in December 1922 and should be legally "grandfathered," Cameron said on Tuesday.

> 'If they had made Chief Quinn take out his third apartment, I would have been somewhat disappointed.'
> Shirley Jaffe

Among other evidence, Cameron cited a September 1922 plumbing permit, a statement that the building initially had three electric meters and census and voter records.

But Jaffe said the city would not accept a third gas meter as evidence her 337 Central Street building had three legal units. Some homes have "house" electric meters which measure power use in common areas, such as hallways, said Jaffe.

The 1922 plumbing permit — which Cameron said is evidence the Washington Street building had three kitchens and therefore three apartments — proves nothing, Jaffe said.

Jaffe's complaint was based on permits in the Building Department file which say the chief's building had only two apartments long before he purchased it in 1954.

Assistant City Solicitor Michael Baseman explained those permits are filled out by contractors who are not always accurate in listing the dwelling units.

"Everything they've come up with is hypothetical," Jaffe said of the city. "They're trying to prove their own records are wrong. They're actually fighting their own records."

Baseman said the Building Department does not rely on any one piece of information to prove an apartment should be a legal, nonconforming use.

"It's a wealth of evidence," he said. "You have to look at the totality."

The Jaffes were given the same opportunity as Quinn to prove their houses at 172 Park St. and 58 Winthrop St. do not violate zoning, said Baseman.

"The Building Department does not give special treatment," he said. "They have the opportunity — as any homeowner does — to prove nonforming (use) or seek a variance or file an appropriate petition for a special permit before the Board of Aldermen."

"What they've done is complained and not used their legal remedies," the city attorney observed.

JFK holiday push gains momentum

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A Brighton man is crusading to honor John F. Kennedy and is asking the Board of Aldermen to adopt a resolution calling for a state holiday commemorating the late president.

James Coughlin, 32, would like the board to pass the resolution, which would designate the state election day as a state holiday honoring Kennedy.

"We have forgotten John F. Kennedy," Coughlin says. "He was a great man who was taken from us in the prime of his life. I felt an obligation as a resident of this area to work for a holiday that will commemorate him."

Coughlin would like the Garden City to join 16 other Bay State communities who support a statehouse bill introduced by Representative John Businger (D-Brookline). While there are a number of bills asking for nearly the same thing, Coughlin thinks the Businger bill is a better idea because it would not come in conflict with other state holidays.

"The Kennedy family does not want to commemorate Nov. 22," Coughlin says of the day Kennedy was shot in Dallas in 1963. "Many people would like to see May 29, the President's birthday, be the holiday, but many communities have expressed concern that it would conflict with Memorial Day."

In addition, Coughlin also says that 22 other states have declared election day to be a state holiday, which increased the numbers of voters going to the polls. Also, he points out that Alabama, Texas and Missouri have created state holidays honoring presidential natives Thomas Jefferson, Lyndon Johnson and Harry Truman, respectively.

Alderman Arthur Reilly, who introduced the aldermanic resolution, says "the time is right" to commemorate Kennedy.

"It is appropriate at this time to consider a holiday commemorating one of Massachusetts' outstanding citizens and leaders," he says.

Edward Martin, an aide to Senator Edward Kennedy, says the family is "very appreciative" of efforts to commemorate the senator's late brother.

"There have been a number of petitions," Martin says. "Each one has some problems, though. For example, the President's birthday is the family's only real preference, but that would make that week contain two hoidays. The election proposal sounds suitable, but it could involve problems of double pay for police officers in various cities and towns. The family, though, is honored and greatful for people considering the memory of President Kennedy."

State Representative Susan Shur supports Coughlin's work, but thinks that there may already be too many state holidays.

"I think that the state obviously has very strong and warm recollections of Kennedy," she says. "But, there are about 76 such resolutions being heard. Everyone has an idea about what day should be selected. What emerges is another question. What sounds most reasonable to me is a commemorative day, not necessarily a state holiday where businesses would be shutting down. We have a rather large and increasing number of state holidays already."

Despite the logistic difficulties, State Representative David Cohen says the holiday should fall on Kennedy's birthday.

"The main purpose is honoring the man," he says. "I think that questions of administrative conveniences should be secondary. John Kennedy was a great man and president and it would be completely fitting and proper that there be a state holiday in his honor."

"Traditionally, when we have created these kind of holidays, they have been on the person's birthday. I think any holiday honoring Kennedy should fall sometime around his birthday."

Rep. Joseph DeNucci agrees that Kennedy should be honored. "We absolutely should observe this," he says of the holiday. "He was a son of Massachusetts who gave his life for this country. I don't have a preference, just whatever might be appropriate in terms of how it fits in with other holidays."

"The police told this guy he couldn't use his hibachi. He came up to me and asked if he and about 20 of his friends could use my front lawn.

"There have also been the legendary arguments and fistfights over parking in the general area. The parking is always a mess and there is always a hassle with the television trucks getting in the way."

Reilly is well-known for playing host to the annual Marathon bash at his 341 Washington St residence. The party is so well-known that BAA officials once called him to find out if he had seen the infamous Rosie Ruiz run Heartbreak Hill.

"They called me up to find out if I had seen her run by the house," Reilly says of BAA officials. "There were so many people that year that I really couldn't tell."

In addition to the people he invites, the Reilly residence is somewhat akin to an aide station.

"There are always people sleeping out on the median," he says. "During the race, there are always at least 100 people who come in to use the bathroom. Nothing in the house has ever been touched and we even got a letter from a family from Connecticut thanking me for the use of the house."

Take the law to heart.

Half million to be put aside for law suits

NEWTON — The city will tuck away $500,000 for legal contingencies, City Solicitor Daniel Funk revealed recently at aldermanic Legislation and Rules Committee budget hearings.

The half-million dollars is designed to replace liability insurance for law suits against the city. While the last bid for liability insurance was for "about $300,000," Funk says historically, annual damage awards against the city "don't come anywhere near that figure."

"It's a crapshoot," Funk says. "You never know what is going to come up. We've never paid more than $25,000 for a settlement. There is a $100,000 ceiling on liability claims, but if there is a school bus wreck that kills 20 children and there is negligence proved, that could mean a $2 million settlement. You just never know about these things."

Despite the risks, Funk says self-insurance is a "safe bet."

"You have to look at the track record on these things," he says. "Insurance companies do it all the time. This way, any difference between the cost of an insurance premium and money we actually pay out is saved."

Funk hints at a number of "larger" settlements that will be reached in the near future. "I really can't be too specific because we haven't settled yet."

Voter lists will be available for purchase

NEWTON — Lists containing names and addresses of the Garden City's approximately 50,000 registered voters will be available for purchase at the end of the month.

According to Election Commission Executive Secretary Alan Licarie, a state law passed in 1985 requires election commissioners to provide the chairmen of the Democratic and Republican City Committees with a computer tape of the resident's file or a set of mailing labels from the same census file.

Though the law specifies that only city committee chairs can request the information, Licarie acknowledges that others might be interested.

"The election commissioners will meet April 22," he says. "One of the things we will discuss is whether or not we should make these lists available to groups other than the city committees. Since they are our lists, it is up to us who we give them to."

Voter lists are always at a premium, especially in election years when campaigns need the information to conduct polls and gather volunteer help and financial contributions.

According to Democratic City Committee Chairman Margaret "Peg" Hennigan who lobbied for the law, political organizations have been seeking this information for years.

"The motivation to get the law passed was that for years we have been trying to get the lists and we were not allowed to get them as such," she says. "We could copy them ourselves, but for years we couldn't get the labels. We were told that the reason was because the Secretary of State did not know how much to charge."

DeNucci garnering support for race

BOSTON — State Rep. Joseph DeNucci's campaign for state auditor is already in full stride, even though the candidate has yet to officially enter the race.

Last week, DeNucci (D-Newton/Waltham) became the first contender for the post to get on the ballot for the upcoming Democratic State Convention and picked up his first official endorsement from Waltham State Rep. Peter G. Trombley.

He said he will make an official announcement regarding his candidacy within a week.

"Things are looking good," according to DeNucci.

His political horizon brightened significantly when state Revenue Commissioner Ira Jackson, thought to be a strong Democratic contender, announced yesterday he would not seek the job.

Meanwhile, DeNucci's potential Republican opposition also has taken shape.

House Minority Leader William G. Robinson (R-Melrose) has declared his candidacy for the post, setting the stage for a GOP battle with Republican State Committee Chairman Andrew Natsios, the state representative from Holiston.

Sam Mahlau, administrative assistant for the Democratic State Committee, said that DeNucci was the first to submit delegate petitions for certification and has easily qualified for the convention ballot.

He had submitted close to 1,000 delegate signatures by, more than double the amount needed, and dropped off "another batch" of petitions in the afternoon, Mahlau said.

DeNucci said he expects to have the support of almost 2,000 delegates - almost half the convention. With the first hurdle cleared, he now needs to capture the official support of 15 percent of the more than 4,500 delegates expected to attend the convention on May 16 and 17 in the Springfield Civic Center.

If more than 700 delegates endorse DeNucci, he will be on the ballot for the Democratic primary in September.

Boston City Councillor Maura Hennigan and State Rep. Richard T. Moore (D-Uxbridge) also have submitted delegate petitions for state auditor, but have not been certified for the convention ballot.

Elders' advocate endorses Pines' bid

NEWTON — Lois Pines has picked up yet another significant endorsement in her bid to succeed state Sen. Jack Backman (D-Newton/Brookline).

In a prepared statement, Frank Manning, one of the state's most influential elder affairs advocates, said he is "looking forward to working with her again on Beacon Hill.

"Lois has always shown compassion for elderly issues throughout her career in public life," he said. "As a state representative, Lois was always there when we needed her, and she showed the ability to effectively push for legislation benefiting the elderly."

Manning, a familiar face at Beacon Hill hearings and rallies, has been an activist in union and elder affairs all his life. As the legislative liaison for the Massachusetts Council of Older Americans, he has lobbied to improve the quality of life for the elderly.

City is seeking affordable housing help

NEWTON — The city is applying for participation in two related state programs designed to increase the low- and moderate-income housing stock, according to Housing Development Coordinator John Quatrale.

The Home Ownership Opportunity Program (HOOP) and the Abandonment Initiative are being offered through the Executive Office of Communities and Development to generate an increase in affordable housing stocks statewide.

The HOOP program is expected to provide $225 million to finance the construction of 2,500 affordable housing units statewide over the next two years. The money is to be made available, in the form of reduced-rate mortgages, to a limited number of first-time homebuyers with incomes from $18,000 to $35,000.

An unspecified amount of Abandonment Initiative money will be available to 40 urban communities to stimulate the construction of low- and moderate-income units in certain development projects.

While all communities can apply for HOOPs funding, Quatrale says Newton is one of "a select" group of urban communities being considered for the Abandonment Initiative.

He adds that a number of sites currently in the city's property reuse process are being considered as Abandonment Initiative sites. They include Bigelow Junior High School, the former Pine Street landfill, the old F.A. Day Education Center and Warren Junior High School.

"The end result, if Newton is accepted and the program passes the reuse process here," Quatrale says, "is they can be used for rental, cooperative, condominium or townhouse ownership. The money would be used to offset a developer's mortgage so that at least 25 percent of a project's units will be dedicated to low- and moderate-income families."

The HOOP program, according to Quatrale, is similar. Instead of being aimed at developers, though, HOOP money would be allocated directly to the consumer wishing to purchase a unit in a qualified project. The trick, he says, will be determining who will be selected for the limited number of units that will be generated.

"Any project to be considered would have to go through the same reuse process involving the Board of Aldermen and the mayor to be designated as appropriate for the home ownership program," Quatrale says. "While all the sites considered are in some phase of the reuse process, this will help people purchase the units if and when Newton is selected for the program. It will be very competitive for the limited number of units. We are waiting for state guidance to decide who gets what. That is one of the issues to be resolved."

Phone purchases could save $500,000

NEWTON — The city could save as much as $500,000 in the long run by purchasing telephone equipment to replace the roughly 1,000 telephones it rents for its 60 buildings, according to Purchasing Agent Blair Kanbar.

The Board of Aldermen have approved an appropriation of $310,000 for the switch from rental to city-owned telephones.

Last week, Kanbar told the aldermanic Finance Committee he already has a bid from New York and New England Telephone Exchange (NYNEX). He expects about six companies to bid for the contract. The phones could be on line by July, Kanbar said.

The new touch-tone phones should be appreciated by city workers because they will be easier to operate. "We're going to upgrade the system from rotary dial, which is very, very antiquated," Kanbar said.

The city spends about $100,000 annually to rent phones, Kanbar said. The new phones should pay for themselves through savings over time, observed Kanbar.

In the long run, "We should save well over one-half million dollars," Kanbar estimated.

The city will still have to spend a projected $117,500 next year to rent phone lines and pay for message units and long distance, according to Mayor Theodore D. Mann's fiscal 1987 budget proposal.

Drug testing no threat to several local unions

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — While drug testing was a controversial issue in the recent police union contract, other city unions do not feel threatened by the possibility of the policy speading into their future contracts.

"I imagine drug testing will be an issue pretty soon," said Dan McLaren, president of Local 800, which represents the city's public works employees.

"It's a tough question though and I'm not sure whether we have the right to put such language in the contract," he said. "Do we have the right to abrogate someone's civil rights?"

McLaren said the city screens employees before they are hired, but testing after hiring has not been an issue yet.

"The Civil Liberties Union says drug testing is illegal and a violation of a person's right to privacy," he said. "If the issue does arise, the city will most likely use the same argument of public safety with us as they did with the police."

McLaren said he would not want someone who uses drugs operating city trucks and equipment, but he is unsure about the legality of drug testing.

"How can you be against people being drug-free? It's like being against apple pie and baseball," he said.

John Proia, president of the American Federation of County and Municipal Employees Local 3092 said he doesn't know how it would apply to his union.

"It's hard to say what's going to happen with this issue. I suppose it could conceivably spread into our negotiations," Proia said.

Bob Robards, president of the school cafeteria and custodians' union, said drug testing methods have not been perfected and that all the ramifications of placing the policy in the contract should be studied first.

"You have to be very careful because these tests are not foolproof," he said. "Once you cover a person with mud, it doesn't matter how much you scrub him, the stigma will still be there."

Before Robards would allow the city to impose drug testing language in his union's contract, he would want "proof of the need for it," he said.

"We certainly do everything we can to protect the civil rights of our workers, but at the same time, we are aware that we work with children and safety is of major importance," he said.

If the city cannot find evidence to support the need for drug testing, Robards said, the city should not bring up the idea during negotiations.

"I'd like to know if the mayor and his staff are being tested. Let him be the first, if he feels so strongly about the issue," he said. "Let he who is without sin cast the first stone."

Come on, Duke. It's time to pay.

We urge Governor Michael Dukakis to take advantage of the state's salubrious fiscal condition, the best indicator of which is a whopping $500 million-plus surplus, to pay off a longstanding debt that could actually benefit the City of Newton to the tune of $2.6 million.

For more than five years, the state has paid less than half of the rental charges it agreed to in 1980, when it took over all the county courthouses. The state seems to have treated counties all over the commonwealth with an even hand, running up a $60 million total debt, but we are really concerned with the $26 million owed to Middlesex County.

Given that the City of Newton pays the lion's share of the expenses of county government, approximately 10 percent, we could reap considerable benefits from the state's living up to the agreement it made in 1980. The amount the county assesses the city could theoretically be reduced by some $2.6 million if the state dipped into its surplus to fulfill its obligations.

In a year which has been marked by drastic cutbacks in funds coming to the city from the federal and state levels, we could use that money to maintain or even augment essential city services.

While it seems unconscionable that the state would not live up to its commitments while its wallet is bulging, it seems ridiculous that, at the same time, taxpayers across the state are being asked to fund the construction of a new courthouse in Suffolk County.

We agree with Mayor Theodore D. Mann, head of the Middlesex County Advisory Board, when he complains that "There is no equity there. The state can only speak of surplus after all its debts are paid."

The time is now. The money is there. It might be a long, long time before the county finds as balmy a fiscal climate in which to press its case. The mayor has made his pitch for several years now. Some more aggressive pursuit by the County Commissioners and our State Representatives would seem to be the next step.

Mario Limentano, an elderly Italian Jew and survivor of the Dachau death camp, called it "a beautiful thing," and he was right. He was referring to the unprecedented visit of Pope John Paul II to Rome's main synagogue, where the pontiff called for mutual respect and brotherhood among followers of the West's two oldest religions.

The visit, believed to be the first time a pope had set foot in a Jewish house of worship, underscored the revolution in relations between Roman Catholics and Jews. The synagogue itself stands in a former walled ghetto where from 1555 to 1848, under the orders of successive popes, Rome's Jews were forced to live and were locked in at night.

John Paul himself could never have entered the synagogue, embraced the chief rabbi of Rome and prayed with him if it had not been for his great predecessor, Pope John XXIII, and the Second Vatican Council of 1962-65.

Among its many works to renew the church, Vatican II issued "Nostra Aetate" (In Our Times), declaring that the Jews did not bear a collective responsibility for Christ's death and thus removing a theological underpinning for anti-Semitism.

In unmistakable terms, John Paul, a theological conservative, sought to sweep away fears of many Jews that he was drifting away from the spirit of Vatican II. He strongly condemned all forms of anti-Jewish discrimination and spoke warmly of the Old Testament roots of Catholicism and Judaism.

"Yes," he said, "once again, through myself, the church, in the words of the well-known declaration 'Nostra Aetate,' deplores the hatred, persecutions, and displays of anti-Semitism directed against the Jews any time and by anyone. I repeat, 'By anyone.' "

The white-robed pontiff disappointed many of the worshippers present by not mentioning Israel. They had hoped that his visit would be a prelude to the Vatican's diplomatic recognition of the Jewish state. However, the Vatican had made known that the pope's historic appearance in the synagogue was to have religious, not political, meaning.

Much of what any pope does has symbolic meaning, and in time John Paul's visit to the synagogue on the Tiber River may be seen as an effort to end almost 2,000 years of discord between Catholics and Jews.

Marking Time

Doin' the 'Hokey Pokey'

By Mark White

I hereby declare my candidacy for every political office in the state!!!

Well, I can't resist the temptation any longer. It's true that I've been out of office for four years and I've been enjoying the life of a private citizen, but as a political person I cannot pass up the opportunity any longer.

So, it is with a great anticipation that I hereby declare my candidacy for every political office in the state!!

Scoff if you must, but it makes perfect sense to me and I happen to think that I have a good chance at half of them.

You see my theory is that at least half of these office-seekers will quit before the end of the campaign and I want to be ready when they do. Think it's funny? The attorney general quit. The state auditor quit. The state senator decided to retire gracefully. The lieutenant governor left to go to Washington. The speaker of the house has had enough. And now one of the candidates for attorney general decides to pack it in.

I assume that, since Scott Harshbarger is now seeking re-election, most of those seeking the office of Middlesex D.A. will also pack it in soon.

So, if you put your name in for all of these offices, one has to open up, right!

Isn't this fun? Pick an office and jump in. You'll spend hours putting your campaign together. You'll put the bite on everybody you know for money. You'll go to every PTA meeting that you can find and shake hands with any palm that's stuck out.

But, just to make sure that you cover yourself, you better pick at least two offices to run for. You see, you can't be sure anymore that the office you're running for is really vacant.

Frankly, this political year is no longer funny. It's pitiful. State office holders decide at the last moment that they don't want to run for re-election and set off a mad scrambling by all the ambitious politicians who jump to vacate their own offices.

Then, new hopefuls announce their candidacies for these offices being vacated.

Then the ambitious politicians see the handwriting on the wall and decide they can't win, and they're better off staying in their present job. So they go back to their old office, pulling the rug out from under the new hopefuls.

Frankly,I'm sick of it. These incumbent office holders have an obligation to the voters to ensure a legitimate political process. What's going on now is no more than a political lottery. Nobody knows who's running for what or what vacancy will remain vacant.

Jack Backman and Tip O'Neill got out with class, giving potential candidates enough time to put together legitimate campaigns.

Then, to ensure the total chaos of the political process, candidates change their mind about higher office and decide to return to their safe seats.

And what's with you, the voters, who let them get away with this Hokey Pokey return? (You remember the Hokey Pokey: "You put your left foot in. You take your left foot out. You put your left foot in and you shake it all about. ...") .

We really have to be fools to allow the political process to disintegrate into a morass of last minute withdrawals, quickie candidacies and disapearing vacancies.

Be it the 8th district congressional office, attorney general, state auditor, district attorney, or state representative, there has been a distinct lack of respect for the voters and the process itself.

I'm not rapping the incumbent candidates. All of them have done an excellent job in their positions. But the way they have handled their respective candidacies leaves a lot to be desired and we let them get away with it.

It's not their fault. It's ours. It started with Ed Markey and now it's contagious. And you know what? Who really cares anymore? Certainly, not me.

H.L. Mencken once said, "Nobody ever lost a dime underestimating the intelligence of the American buying public." If voters continue to buy these "Hokey Pokey" candidacies, H.L.'s dime will be plenty safe in this state.

One story, many versions in press

By Edward F. King

A recent poll showed that a large body of Americans does not trust the press. When confronted with that fact, some leading media personalities grew very upset. They "couldn't understand" the poll results. In fact, they claimed that people "don't like the news and tend to blame the messenger."

This writer hates to disillusion all the paragons of truth, virtue, and justice who report the news. But the fact is that major media outlets are not only biased, they are often incompetent and underqualified to handle certain stories.

If necessary, I could produce dozens of examples of inaccuracy, misinformation, and outright distortion–all passed off as "news." In fact, several excellent books have been written on the subject.

For our purposes, let's just hit on one recent, but outrageous, instance of misreporting and inaccuracy.

On March 22, the Roman Catholic Church, through its Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, released an extraordinary document that was designed to instruct cardinals, bishops, and even local priests as to the permissible level of their participation in politics. In early April, copies of the documents were sent to the media.

On April 5, the Boston Herald headlined their story, "Vatican OKs Armed Struggle for Christians." The Boston Globe, reporting on the same exact document, used the headline "Vatican Rejects Violence, Asks Spiritual Revolution." Exact opposites!

But, you say, even though the headlines got confused, the stories were accurate. No way!

According to the Herald, "The Vatican, in a major document on the social role of the Roman Catholic Church, said today Christians have the right to fight unjust governments and turn to armed struggle to end 'prolonged tyranny'."

The Globe started its story by informing us "Vatican officials rejected violence as a means of achieving social justice, and called instead for a spiritual revolution to liberate humankind."

There are several conclusions that can safely be drawn. First of all, it is self-evident that at least one of those major newspapers is wrong, wrong, wrong. Secondly, it is rather obvious that thousands of people, perhaps hundreds of thousands, are walking around with a totally incorrect view of the contents of a truly important document.

Finally, the most important truth of all. If you want to know what the Vatican document says, get a copy and read it. For yourself.

High tech should branch out

By Loring Swaim

If Massachusetts expects to stay at the cutting edge of technology, it had better get with it with new technologies and not coast on its present advantage with existing technologies.

If we rest on our oars, content with our leadership in high tech and computers, we could well be haunted by our late grim experience with textiles and leather. Hey, we led the country in those fields at one time, and look what happened.

This blunt warning was at the heart of the first of the Lowell Lecture Series this year recently at Suffolk University. Bank of Boston senior economist and vice president Dr. James Howell was principal speaker.

But he tempered his advice with a good deal of assurance that New England has all the key ingredients necessary to get ahead and stay ahead.

On the constructive side, says Howell, three special factors have brought exceptional growth to this region in the last ten years (from unemployment at 15 percent in 1975 to 4 percent today). They have been: 1) our preeminent educational facilities (260 colleges 65 in Boston, 800,000 students); 2) our highly competitive risk-taking financial resources, especially among highly-motivated young people (with 3 percent of the nation's population, we produce 30 percent of its venture capital); and 3) our spirit of entrepreneurship.

New England registered an 18.5 percent growth in new incorporations in 1985 (Conn. up 38.1;1 N.H. up 28.6; Mass. up 11.6), according to Dun & Bradstreet. The renowned business information outfit comments, "The record numbers reflect the high level of entrepreneurial activity that has driven the current US economic recovery and expansion."

(Business failures, by the way, also increased in 1985, by 9.6 percent. This was "attributable," says D&B, "to a sharp increase in bankruptcies among small service firms, but this was largely a result of the dramatic rise in business starts in this sector in recent years.)

But today, where 40 percent of the nation's information economy is computer-based, in the foreseeable future that could fall to 10 percent, even five, Howell cautions.

"We must create the environment for the next technologies while we keep current with the present technology. Otherwise we're in for another round of stagnation."

In biotechnology, for instance, New England–and more generally, the U.S.–has made the largest commitment to basic research. But we may not reap the full benefits in jobs and income; other states and other countries are carving out strategic aspects of development with potentially huge dividends.

Japan, for instance, is leapfrogging over research in molecular biology to go directly into production.

A plan by a Needham biotech firm to spend $40 million in Boston on production of monoclonal antibodies eventually wound up in Scotland after the FDA said it couldn't be done here and Scotland offered an irresistible package.

Drug companies in New Jersey, not New England, are anteing up huge sums for drug research into viral and genetic manipulation.

Companies bent on medical research into recombinant DNA dot the countryside in France these days, reports Suffolk U's Dr. Jane Ives (a Lowell Lecture panelist), along with nuclear power plants often discouraged in the US. It is curious, observes Ives, that though France has a Socialist government, it is consciously and aggressively encouraging private enterprises such as these in order to beef up its economy and to prove the strength of its ideology.

Recent editorial insulted citizens of Newton

To the editor:

My first reaction in reading the Graphic's recent editorial, "No public interest in school budget," was to counter the editorial's negative comments about the Newton school budget proposal itself. As a School Committee member who voted enthusiastically for the proposal, my inclination was to repeat statements which I and other School Committee members had made during the budget review process; statements which would indicate the rationale behind the affirmative vote.

I found, however, that to go into a lengthy defense does not do justice to the respect I have for Newton citizens who have always valued the strength of their public schools and continued their support for them. Additionally, as disturbed as I was by the editorial's negative comments about the budget, I was equally disturbed by the editorial's castigation of how parents conducted themselves during past school closing hearings.

The editorial spoke of "rampant rhetoric," "frustrated parents," and sarcastically of giving children "an excellent example of how adults are not supposed to negotiate their grievances." As co-president of the Williams Elementary School P.T.A. during the last period of elementary school closing, my recollection of the hearings is far different from the editorial's. What I witnessed, first hand, were citizens from several Newton communities exercising their democratic privilege in our best American tradition. I saw parents who, while deeply concerned about the possible loss of their neighborhood school, gathered their facts, collected their arguments, and presented their views to their elected officials through carefully prepared oral and written statements.

In my own community, I saw the coming together of a cross section of citizens who worked energetically for several weeks to prepare cogent, well-reasoned statements. The results of that effort were not only positive for our school, but impressed school committee members, other elected representatives, and school department personnel with the extent of our preparation. Frequently, data used by our presenters supplemented and even supplanted data supplied by the school department officials themselves. Throughout the hearing process, given the issue at stake, I was often amazed at how rational and logical citizens were. This was true for my community as well as for other affected communities.

Contrary to the editorial, the hearings were an excellent civic example to our children, an example of what an involved citizenry can accomplish, and that the individual can make an impact. I was proud that my own two elementary-aged youngsters saw direclty what their parents and their friends' parents were doing.

The Graphic's editorial was, thus, insulting in two ways to Newton's citizens: first, in not recognizing their long support for the public schools, and second, in not appreciating the validity of their past efforts during school closing hearings.

Adams St. Shul a history of labor and love

My Dear Mr. Kennedy:

There are no Jewish people in the City of Newton who feel prouder of your recent article on the Agudas Achim Synagogue than this "Irish-American" citizen.

It is a history so steeped in labor and love that I could not let it go by without adding my first-hand knowledge of it.

My family grew up on Crafts Street, where a Mr. Baker ran the little neigborhood store. It was the local hangout, as we all loved the Baker family.

My brother and all the neighborhood boys helped Mr. Baker in bringing over the chairs to the temple. Any job he wanted done we did it for him during the holidays. We were repaid: There was candy in his store.

At the turn of the century, my grandfather built Maguire Court. The little houses were brand new then, and the Jewish families had their first service there.

My grandfather loved his tenants for their sincerity, loyalty, and devotion to their religion. "Love thy neighbor" was my mother's policy. It was taught to her and carried through to her children's children.

Your article will enable us all to remember their royalty to their religion. Meager salaries could barely meet their needs but their devotion and love for their faith carried them through. Due to this ceremony at the Jackson Homestead, these loyal original settlers will live forever in the history of Newton.

Sincerely,
Mary Morrissey Tuite

Give it back to taxpayers!

Give it back, Mr. Mayor, and Board of Aldermen!

While Newton may have some affluent people, there are many poor, middle class and elderly people who live on the margin. Some of these people are being taxed out of their homes.

At the same time the City of Newton has a large surplus. That money came from us, belongs to us, and should be given back to us. A six percent reduction in taxes in 1986 would save the average Newton homeowner around $150,000.

Knowing all of that, it is even more amazing, Mr. Mayor and Board of Aldermen, to hear that some of you are proposing tax increases. We say we know how to spend our money better than you do. We say "Give it back."

Wallet returns, faith restored

To the editor:

Every once in a while, something happens to restore my faith in mankind, and my belief that people are basically honest.

This past Monday, I lost my wallet in the vicinity of Centre Street. It didn't have a lot money in it, but someone surely could always use an extra $50 or $60. It did however, contain my drivers license, and other personal papers.

I was encouraged by all to go get another license — for I would never see my wallet again.

At noontime my doorbell rang, and a woman introduced herself as Dot Stowe. She returned my wallet intact.

I now know that there are still honest people out there. People even considerate enough to track you down to return my wallet. This is my way of saying thank you to Dorothy Stowe, a resident of whom you can be proud. Thank you kindly!

Doctor Brown Remembered

By Paul D. Snyder

He was one of the last of an era, and I'm glad that my children had the opportunity to see him and know him, that is to the extent that any of us ever got to know him.

An amiable man with a deep and genuine concern for your well being, yet with a reserve that showed little of himself, Doctor Brown is probably best remembered by generations as the family doctor who would come at 2 a.m. with his black bag and either a very large Saint Bernard or Great Pyrennes, who would patiently wait while he ministered to a sick child or an infirm grandparent.

He was a very private man, who I'm sure had the same inner fears and frustrations that we all share; yet he did not want to burden any other human being for an instant. In an age of hedonism, Dr. Brown was the consummate altruist.

We moved into the house behind his when Doctor Brown was towards the end of his career, yet people would not stop coming to him or calling him for help. He would never refuse to minister to any of them.

I remember one time, when our pediatrician was out of town, and our then three-year-old daughter was running an unusually high fever. We weren't able to reach the doctor covering for the pediatrician so, when I saw Doctor Brown working in his back yard, I went out, climbed up on one of the picnic table benches and called over the fence. Five minutes later he was in our house examining Kathleen. He prescribed an antibiotic, but reached into his black bag and gave me enough samples of the medicine to get her through the sickness. He wouldn't take a dime in payment though.

The next day was a Sunday; about ten in the morning the phone rang. It was Doctor Brown: "Mr. Snyder?" It was always "Mr. Snyder," in his shy, almost timorous way, even though I was a good thirty five years his junior. "How is the little girl? If it's not inconvenient, I'd like to come over and see her." This happened two or three times in the five-day course of her illness. God, what a wonderful man he was.

Though he owned a magnificent home in Weston, his brother's widow lived there with her family, and he preferred to sleep on a day bed in his waiting room.

He was a man who had no interest in material things, yet I couldn't tell the number of times that he would appear at the door with a shirt, asking me what size I took, or some clothing for one of the children, or a workbench light that he had seen in a store and thought that I might like.

It seemed that the only creature comfort Doctor Brown ever had was the air conditioner in his office. About a year after we moved in the neighborhood, we had our first child. The baby had not been home from the hospital for a week when Doctor Brown came over and asked me if the noise from the air conditioner bothered the baby or my wife and myself. "No," I answered truthfully; yet the next day he had replaced the air conditioner with a quieter one, and explained that he was concerned that the older model might keep "the little one" up.

You could fill a book with ancedotes about Doctor Theodore Brown, but he would have been embarrassed if someone had when he was alive. My only regret about having known him is that I did not meet him earlier in our lives. He was a good and decent person, and if any man living was ever sainted, Doctor Brown must be.

The positive side of midlife crisis

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

Perhaps Dante described the midlife phenomenon most accurately when he wrote, "In the middle of the journey of our life, I came to myself in a dark wood where the straight way was lost."

This "dark wood" causes people to look back on their lives, and often can be the source of much distress, according to Marylynn Boris, who spoke last night at Bigelow Junior High.

The lecture, "In the Middle Journey: Managing the Losses that Accompany Mid-Life Growth and Change" was part of a free lecture series offered by The Life Studies Foundation.

Adults undergoing this stage are faced with many changes — children leaving home, career redirection, marital reassessment, aging of parents and confrontation with death — all of which contribute to this period of uncertainty, Boris says.

Midlife — which Boris defines as anywhere from 35 to 65 years old — affects each person differently, she says. She adds, however, that research shows many people in this age group share similar emotional dilemmas.

In the stages that precede midlife, death is viewed as something distant and is rarely considered, Boris says. When men and women look back on their accomplishments to find the dreams and goals they set for themselves never reached fruition, they begin to evaluate the quality of life they have led, she says.

During the first 30 years, Boris says, people set goals for themselves and they have dreams of success or happiness. As time wears on and goals are not achieved, however, a sense of helplessness sometimes occurs.

In younger years, Boris says, life is fresh and full of opportunity. With the progression of age, she adds, idealism is lost and life takes on a different meaning.

Boris says midlife affects men and women in different ways. A switching of roles often occurs — men begin to show signs of slowing down in their professions, while women, having raised the children, often look for jobs or return to school.

> 'Midlife can represent an integration of the power of youth and the wisdom of old age.'
> Marylynn Boris

Men usually have three distinct phases in life, Boris says. The first is the novice stage in which a man chooses a profession, forms mentor relationships and sets his lifetime goals.

The settling-down phase, between the ages of 30 and 40, is when men work toward advancement and establish a niche in the world, she continues.

At 40, men judge whether they have successfully arrived at the goals they set earlier in life, Boris adds, personal despair can occur if they realize their dreams have not been attained.

"At this time, men are confronted with a reassessment of their dream," Boris says. "They must let go of their previous views and formulate new ones."

For many women, midlife represents the end of motherhood, she explains. Some women, relieved when their children have left the house, feel both excited and frightened at this stage, while others may experience the empty-nest syndrome, suddenly finding themselves without children and experiencing a sense of emptiness.

"Women, at this time, are both relieved and worried that they weren't successful in rearing their children," Boris says. "Some feel a void of sadness, knowing that family life will never be the same."

Many women, faced with ample time, find jobs or return to school to further themselves, she adds.

"The value of one's self becomes apparent," Boris says. "During this time, these women search for something substantive."

The dilemma people face in midlife is a transitionary period, rather than a crisis, Boris says. Paradoxically, midlife begins with an ending, but can be the source of rejuvenation and growth in the last stage of life, she says.

"Midlife can represent an integration of the power of youth and the wisdom of old age," she says. "It can transform people, bringing fullness and satisfaction into one's life."

Rizzo aims to ease day care crunch

"The schools cannot be the primary provider of day care, although we have tried to be very responsive to the community," she said.

There are extended-day programs at several schools that are run independently and the schools have tried to supply as much space as is available to support the programs, Schnipper said.

According to Schnipper, school building space has been available in the past due to declining enrollment.

"The schools can no longer assume the same role as they did 10 years ago because elementary school enrollment is rising and the availiblity of space is decreasing," she said. "We really need a much larger view of the situation. We need long-range planning."

The agency, which estimates it helped some 4,000 young people last year, also runs a shelter in Boston.

"I think what we have here is kids who have had a pretty good life reaching out to kids who haven't had the good fortune they have had," said Sr. Margaret Whelan, executive director of Bridge Over Troubled Waters. "The most exciting part of this project is that teens are raising money for their peers. They've done it all themselves."

Helping runaway teens is a cause that struck very close to home for Tetrakoff.

"A kid I knew ran away from home four times," he said. "Her life was never on keel and then she went to Bridge Over Troubled Waters and it changed her life."

Sunday's concert featured two professional bands, Ball and Pivot and The Drive; and two high school bands, Soothing Sounds For Baby from Newton North and Cool Moon from Wayland High School.

Approximately 500 people attended the Metro concert. Some chaperones wore earplugs during the concert, but the earth-shaking volume of the music did not seem to bother the students. They screamed for more music, and the louder it got, the more they loved it.

Beaver Country Day School students John Fields of Newton — who also manages Soothing Sounds For Baby — and Steve Zezitas of Wellesley did much of the leg work to make the project a reality.

There were a lot of obstacles standing in the organizers way in the beginning — how to get a club, the performers, the money to pay for it all and how to get support of other young people from other schools.

They tapped every resource available to them, Tetrakoff said.

Beaver parents raised $3,000 in a telethon, which Tetrakoff said covered most of the concert expenses. Beaver Middle School students had a dance and raised $250.

"This money paid for the professional bands and the rent for the Metro," he said. "This means everything we make from the ticket sales and T-shirts and paraphernalia will be profit."

The students are hoping to raise $10,000, which might be a long shot, but they're almost half way there.

"There are a lot of ticket sales we haven't counted yet," Tetrakoff said. "Strawberries and Ticketron also sold tickets and we probably won't know how much we made in total until Tuesday, and that figure will include the door sales."

Tickets cost $10 and the T-shirts sold for $7.50. The students also went to local Rotary Clubs to raise money. The Wellesley club donated $800.

"These kids showed tremendous initiative by going to these clubs to raise money. They took their jobs very seriously," Whelan said. "At this point it doesn't matter how much money they raise. The most important thing is what a beautiful thing has happened here today — teens helping other less privileged teens."

Police: prostitution ring broken up ring of 25 to 50 women, most of them in their early to mid-20s, said Fryar. According to advertisements for the escort service, male escorts also were available.

The number of clients involved was "possibly in the hundreds," said Fryar. Fees for the first hour of companionship were $150 if paid by cash, $170 if paid by MasterCard and $180 if paid by American Express.

After a couple weeks of investigation by Fryar and fellow Newton detectives, Joseph W. Donahue and Robert A. Ober, Fryar collaborated with Watertown police detectives and they looked into the operations of Boston's Best Escorts.

Informants referred by Fryar to Watertown detectives supplied information suggesting the escort service was actually a call girl service.

Fryar said he conferred with Watertown Detective Sgt. William Chase and Assistant District Attorney Peter Bella and they decided they had enough evidence to obtain search warrants.

Newton detectives, along with Chase and a couple uniformed officers from Watertown, first executed a search warrant for Hawkes' home on Perry Street in Watertown shortly after midnight Wednesday. Hawkes arrived home while the search was continuing about an hour later and was placed under arrest. Her car also was searched.

The Newton detectives then executed another search warrant for the Endless Summer Suntanning Salon at 119 Elm St., West Newton. The salon was used a drop-off point for cash and credit card receipts from the escort service, and checks were written to escorts from the tanning salon, according to police.

Assistant District Attorney Peter Bella said police seized a .32 caliber handgun and "numerous records to indicate a rather substantial operation." Among those records were card files of alleged clients, with their sexual preferences listed.

He said police "seized a lot of records for a lot of clients... I didn't see anything there to indicate they were getting a tan."

He said he saw listings of about 100 names, most of them from the greater Boston area, with a few listing out-of-state addresses.

Bella said the escort service phone number, which was advertised in the Yellow Pages and in the Boston Phoenix, reached Hawkes' Watertown home. He said the alleged meetings between escorts and clients usually took place in private homes or hotels. Bella said a Nov. 5, 1984, raid of the Tres Chic Escort Service in Watertown turned up records that indicated Hawkes was working there at the time as an escort under the name Danielle. She has been operating Endless Summer Tanning Salon for 1½ years, the same amount of time she has lived in Watertown with her 5-year-old daughter and her mother.

Residents critical of gooey street surfaces

Asphalting streets costs about three times more than stonesealing, Hickey said.

Budge said he was satisfied with Hickey's plan. But he added: "We may have some differences down the road as to the resurfacing."

Some committee members decided they would examine the streets is question today. They also voted 4 to 2 to reaffirm an old advisory resolution calling on Mayor Theodore D. Mann to ban stoneseal.

But by a 3 to 3 vote they killed Alderman William Shaevel's advisory resolution to cover six stonesealed streets with asphalt.

Communities have used stonesealing for decades and Newton's Department of Public Works (DPW) recommends it for certain situations, Alderman Dominic Taglienti noted.

"The pros are telling me it can be done," said Taglienti. "We do it down the Cape. It worked for 150 years and now it doesn't work anymore?"

Hickey reminded aldermen that residents from only six of the 61 streets have complained about stoneseal.

A DPW survey of 188 homes shows a majority of residences believe the process has improved their streets and rated them good or excellent after the work was complete, Hickey told the committee.

Stonesealing improves the durability of a road by filling cracks and correcting minor defects, thereby protecting it from frost and water damage, Hickey said.

"It does the job," said the commissioner. "There's no question it does what it is supposed to do."

Public Facilities last night recommended the city spend $185,000 to asphalt 64 streets.

But Alderman Richard McGrath advised members not to recommend the funds for asphalt until they resolved the stonesealing issue.

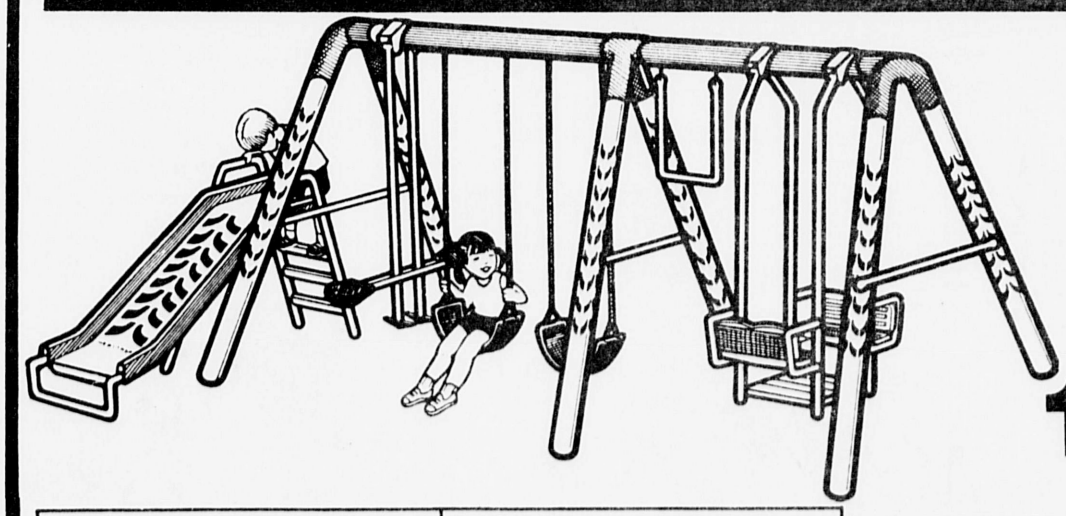

The process is excellent for sealing cracks, but not for surfacing an entire street, he said. "It's byproduct is a dirty, rough, uneven street," observed McGrath. "The people don't want dirty, rough, uneven streets."

Hickey responded, "You asked for a survey. The survey has indicated a majority of the people like those streets."

But McGrath said the DPW survey should have gone out in the summer when the weather was hot, but instead it was mailed in the winter. The wording of the survey questions was biased by the DPW, he said. "The survey is worth zero," McGrath charged.

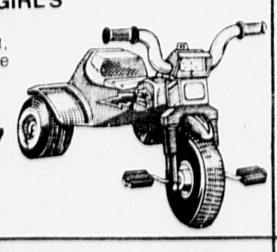

He vowed to fight passage of the $185,000 when the full Board of Aldermen votes the issue. "It's not going through the Board of Aldermen," he said.

Able help for the disabled

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

Barbara Clurman helps pull together family structures which have fractured under the stresses of tragic events.

As director of the Law Project for Multi-handicapped Children, the only known program of its kind, the Albermarle Road resident helps parents of these children obtain financial and support services designated as their right under federal and state laws. And she does it at no charge to the families.

In one case, the Project represented a Newton boy attending a substantially separate program in the Newton Public Schools. His development was normal until he reached age 4½, when he developed a brain tumor.

"He ended up profoundly retarded with an uncontrolled seizure disorder," says Clurman. "He was very behaviorally impaired so that he needed a residential program."

The Project worked with the family, and an agreement was worked out so the Newton Public Schools would be providing a residential program for him with further financial help from the Department of Mental Health and the Department of Social Services.

Now the boy will be receiving the around-the-clock, structured attention he needs and is learning daily living skills "to help him become as independent as possible," she says.

In addition to representing families, the Project provides training seminars and workshops in various communities to help parents of multiply-handicapped children understand their rights. Already scheduled is a three-part series in Haverhill, and workshops in Hyannis, Springfield and Worcester.

The Law Project also organizes presentations for therapists, hospital-based professionals, and educators, to make them aware of the program and ways to help their clients.

"Many of these people see their role as advocates of the children they serve," says Clurman. "I try to help focus that advocacy in ways beneficial."

The Project was formally started in August 1985 by Jim Sokolove, whose law offices, James Sokolove & Affiliates, are located on the opposite side of the building. A personal injury lawyer, Sokolove saw that during litigation — which can be a long, drawn-out process — his clients were not receiving adequate health care and education.

Besides, explains Clurman, "We need to give something back (to clients)." Not only is it a much needed service for parents of handicapped children, but "It's good for business."

A former director of case advocacy with the Massachusetts Advocacy Center, Clurman accepted the post of director because it "coincided with what I wanted to do."

Following her 1971 graduation from the Harvard School of Law, Clurman chose to focus on family rights because "If we didn't have good caring families, we would need (many more) residential programs."

During her subsequent 12 years in the field of family and juvenile law, she recalls liking special education cases because they are "consumer oriented."

"The best parent consumers access the most services," says Clurman. "They are the parents who ask questions and who push pediatricians to come up with answers."

Still, the majority have trouble obtaining the needed services because they are "limited," she says. Early intervention programs have waiting lists, and eligibility for some of them is based on arbitrary criteria. For example, people needing physical therapy on a daily basis can only get it twice a week.

"It's not based on your needs," she says, "but on theirs. Disabled children require good medical coverage, and their families are faced with an incredible dilemma — either the child doesn't get treatment or he/she does, but the family is unable to pay for it.

"A lot of families skew their job situation to ensure they get (federal income) benefits," she says.

The Project — which consists of Clurman, staff attorney Vivian Goldman and paralegal Margie Leonard-Greenberg — now represents about 50 multiply-handicapped children residing throughout the state. Issues typically focus on special education, and medical benefits for disabled children with limited income (called Supplemental Security Income).

All of the cases are heard before a hearing officer or administrative judge — not in a court room, she says.

In another case, the Project represents a family who was paying for physical therapy services. "We were arguing the school should be providing it," said Clurman.

The child, who has been in a coma for over a year following a swimming accident, has required "stimulus" therapy, involving texture, sound and light. During the therapy sessions, "He's more alert," says Clurman.

If fact, she states, "If you don't stimulate a child, they don't learn," explaining that, just as "If you don't move a body, it atrophies. Similarly, if you don't move the brain, it does too."

Four teenagers need foster care now

Newton's Foster Family office has four teens to place in foster care.

The Newton Area Department of Social Services is unable to place these girls because of a lack of resources and homes. Traditionally, we have always been able to place younger children in foster care in Newton, Needham, Wellesley, and Weston, as well as other surrounding communities. We home finders try our best, but often our best is not good enough, especially when a child needs a home now ... like tonight at 5 p.m. before the office closes.

At times we are able to place our adolescents in temporary shelters for two weeks to 30 days. This is helpful and only practical for the short-term; often, adolescents need anywhere from six months to a year with a family. Social workers visit their placements in the home and all medical and dental expenses are paid for. There is a clothing allowance each quarter as well as a monthly stipend to the foster parents.

Those who feel they can give any of the five girls below a home, be able to set limits, provide a secure living arrangement where love can be provided, then please call Priscilla at the Newton Area Office at 965-2607.

Linda is a 15-year-old in the 9th grade at Newton High School and has lived in Newton for several years. She is tall and has straight brown shoulder-length hair. She is a friendly, attractive girl with an average I.Q.

Linda needs a living situation with structure for one year. She also needs external stresses minimized. A two-parent family who could provide consistent limits would be ideal for Linda.

Tina is a 15-year-old and is in the 10th grade in the Newton Public School system. She is presently at a shelter for a very limited time and needs a home as soon as possible. Tina is under five feet tall and has blonde hair. She responds well to limits and structure and looks forward to foster care. She does well with teens her own age and adults. One of her weaknesses is that she might become a follower and show poor judgement.

Placement is for one year and her social worker feels that Tina could be with a single parent as well as a traditional family.

Man-Ti is Asian. She is 15-years-old and is in the 10th grade in the Newton Public Schools. She is below 5 feet, has brown eyes and long black hair. She is not yet aware of all the subtlties of the English language, but is likeable, well behaved and pleasant. She has no family and is trying to cope with our Western culture. I must add that she has done well. She has friends and spends time with them during the weekends.

Man-Ti will need placement until the end of high school where we hope that her foster parents will help her look towards independent living and a career. She needs a stable, mature, supportive and non-exploitative environment - a home that will be sensitive to her culture and provide a sense of security.

Valent is 14 years old and attends the Newton Public Schools. Because there were no foster families in which to place her, she is now at a shelter. Valent needs placement as soon as possible. She is over five feet tall, slim, attractive with light brown hair. She gets along with peers and adults, however, she lacks trust. She is presently angry and confused about not being at home with her adopted family. Valent is a bright, charming, and outgoing adolescent. She would do well in a single or traditional family setting.

Aquinas celebrates 25 years

By Andrew McCloy
Correspondent

NEWTON — The sun broke through the clouds, appropriately, just moments before Archbishop Bernard Cardinal Law began Mass at the 25th anniversary at Aquinas Jr. College Saturday afternoon.

The Mass commenced the celebration of this all-women Catholic college, founded in 1961 by the Sisters of Saint Joseph of Boston.

As Law stood before some 250 faculty, family, alumnae and students in the school's auditorium, he spoke about the special mission of Aquinas Jr. College.

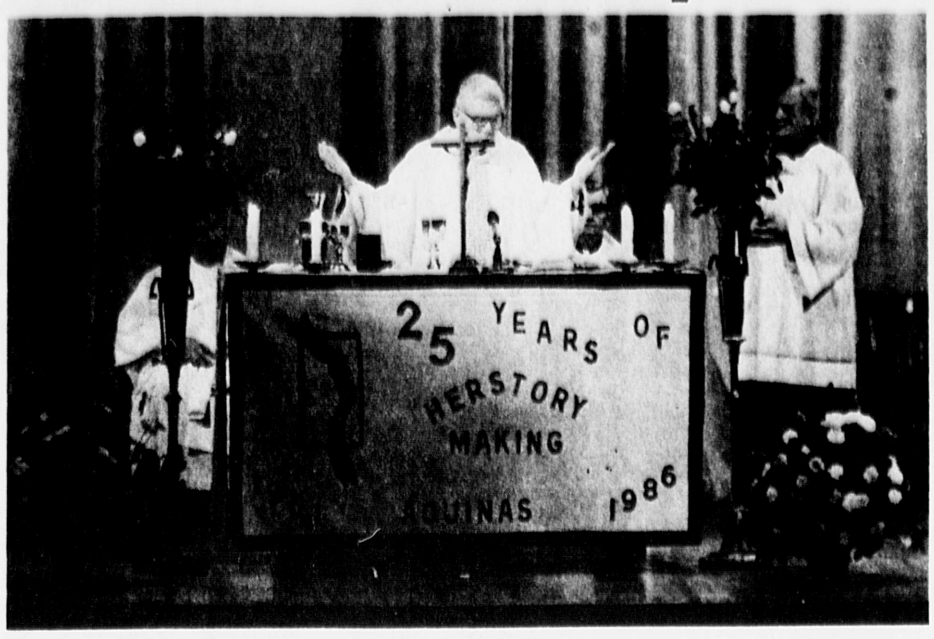

"We are celebrating 25 years of faith," Law said. "Twenty-five years is really not that long of a time ... but today, in a sense, we are caught in the moment of time.

"Aquinas is a school based on a vision ... A vision about God revealed on the face of every man and woman on earth," he said. "In Christ and in his love, we are able to reach our potential as human beings."

Red and white balloons — displaying the school's colors — were tacked up along the walls of the school and the cafeteria, where a reception followed the mass.

Afterward, at the reception, Law was asked to express his views on the role of women in the Catholic Church.

"Women and men are equal from the beginning," he said. "But, unfortunately, that is a truth which is obscured through history. We take our male and female identity very seriously in the Catholic Church. The (Catholic) church does not ordain women, that is not going to change. We are living out an ancient variance of the church."

Archbishop Bernard Cardinal Law says Mass. Jay Zappulla photo

Mayor Theodore D. Mann was among the dignitaries at the celebration. He offered thanks, on behalf of the city of Newton, for the positive influence Aquinas has had on the community.

"The city has had a wonderful relationship with the college," Mann said. "They are a ready partner within the community."

Mann said the college has assisted the city in finding facilities for the Newton Symphony and a home for Vietnamese families.

The pamphlets handed out commemorating the milestone the school has reached read, "25 Years of Herstory Making."

That variation on the word "history" is significant in terms of the all-women's status of the college, according to sister Mauri Ryan, who organized the event.

"We want these women to tell their stories of success," Ryan said. "Women today have few role models. Our alumnae of this school are very successful due to the unique education we offer."

Although Aquinas is a small two-year college with an enrollment of about 300 women, the school offers a liberal arts program with a career focus, Ryan said.

"Employers want a well-rounded individual," said admissions director Donna Lurie. "The liberal arts core program gives Aquinas graduates that edge. Today, more than ever before, career options for women are many."

Ellen Fitzgerald, a 1981 graduate, agreed. Now working as the administrative assistant in the alumnae office at the school, she said she owes much of her success to the education she received at Aquinas.

"I graduated at the bottom fifth of my class in high school," Fitzgerald said. "My confidence was built up while I was at Aquinas. Because of that, I know I can do anything if I apply myself."

Fred Schilpp and Adam Villone, Reunion principals, used over 150 toys to illustrate a variety of humorous situations that might occur on a typical day in the life of a Digital District Office. The video was featured at regional award dinner for Digital employees in recognition of their customer satisfaction skills.

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY
PRIME CUT
The cut of a diamond is a very important factor in the gem's beauty. Regardless of the stone's quality, a diamond that is cut too shallow or too deep will appear lifeless to the eye. When cut in correct proportion, enough light is allowed to enter the stone and not "leak" out the back facets. Even the slightest deviation from fine cutting standards will rob the diamond of its desired fire, brilliance and, ultimately, it value. Thin or spread stones may appear brilliant, but lack sufficient fire for great beauty. Well-cut round brilliant diamonds have fifty-eight exactly placed facets. The placement of each facet requires a high degree of skill on the part of the cutter.
Buying diamonds is quite an investment and one that grows with time. It is worthwhile to buy one that is of finer quality even if it is a little bit more money than you intended to spend. In the long run you'll see it was a wise decision. At CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" you'll find the diamond you've been looking for. Whether you want loose diamonds for investments or diamonds in a piece of jewelry our professional staff will know how to answer all your questions. We work with your individually at 109 Dalby St., Newton. Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

Chief Quinn

Monitoring of 'suicide cells' is urged

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city's jail cells are "suicide cells," according to Police Chief William Quinn, who suggested Monday night that they be monitored whenever someone is incarcerated to prevent prisoners from taking their lives.

"These are very dangerous cells," he told members of the aldermanic Finance and Public Safety & Transportation Committees who were reviewing the police budget. "They are as dangerous as any in the state. We must do something to make sure that suicides don't happen."

Quinn recommended that the city hire a monitor to "keep an eye" on any prisoners. He said the $10,000 outlay for salary would more than pay for itself in the long run.

"My biggest worry is that we will lose somebody," he said. "If we do lose somebody to suicide, or there is an attempt, we will all pay big money because of resulting law suits against the city. I think we should hire someone like a retired police officer to watch the cells. The only way to prevent suicides is to make sure there is somebody watching for as long the prisoner is in the cell. It won't be good duty, but it is something that has to be done."

At first, the chief was reluctant to comment on the number of suicides that have taken place in the jail, but said "There have been two in the 34 years I've been on the force," after prodding from aldermen. "There have been many attempts over the years, but I don't want to get into specific numbers," he added.

While he is complying with a recently enacted law requiring 15-minute checks and video surveillance of cells, Quinn said those precautions "are inadequate."

"We have a very bad situation in our cells," he said. "My orders to the men are that they should get rid of, as soon as possible, people who are arrested for offenses like drunk driving. By the time they are booked, they have sobered up enough to get them home, and I tell the officers to get rid of them if they are all right because you never know what is going to happen."

In addition, Quinn strongly urged parents who think they will teach their children a lesson by keeping them locked up to reconsider.

"The cell blocks are not safe," he said. "Don't get mad and let them stay. Take them home as soon as possible."

Both committees unanimously approved Quinn's request, which will be reviewed again when the complete budget is voted on by the Board of Aldermen.

Y offers special police and fire memberships

NEWTON — The West Suburban YMCA in Newton announced a special membership discount for Newton firefighter and police officers. Len Romano, director of marketing and membership for the YMCA commented, "The YMCA feels it is important to contribute to the fitness, health and welfare of both the police and fire department personnel in Newton who work so hard in protecting the public.

The program, which began on Feb. 1, will entitle any active employee of both departments to a 20 percent discount on yearly YMCA membership.

Police officers and firefighters (men and women) can take advantage of raquetball/squash, swimming, fitness training rooms, weights, indoor/outdoor running and fitness programs.

"In addition to the facilities at the YMCA, the fitness staff is prepared to design special programs, such as 'Health Back,' to meet the needs of police and firefighters," said Romano.

Fire Department Chief Edward Reilly commented, "This progam being offered by the YMCA in Newton will help our firefighters to maintain the high degree of physical fitness required in our profession."

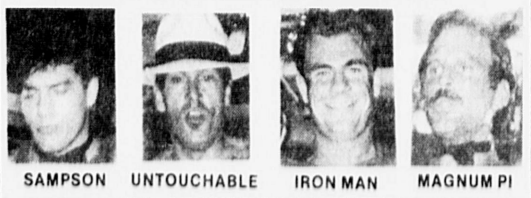

Police Chief William Quinn added, "This program provided to public safety officers is an opportunity to keep them physically fit in both their private and professional lives. I know that police officers have utilized the services of the YMCA in Newton and perceive their programs as one of the most comprehensive in the community."

Fine furniture making a N. E. tradition

By Karen Mamone
Hartford Courant

HARTFORD, CONN. (AP) — For much of its early history, America borrowed and adopted the shapes of English furniture. By the 18th century, however, original American designs for fine furniture were being developed, and regional centers produced their own specialities, using different materials and style variations.

New England was an important center of that innovation, and Connecticut gave its name to the late 17th century Hartford or Connecticut chest, an oak or pine hope chest with painted decorations of flowers and circles.

'New London' look

Connecticut cabinetmakers took their place in the New England tradition of fine furniture making. Books on antique furniture describe the "New London look" as well as the work of Suffield craftsmen Joseph Hastings and John Leavitt, who worked in the latter half of the 1700s.

That tradition has not ended, but it is rare to find that kind of meticulous craftsman today, says Ron Curtis, president of the Woodworkers' Guild of Connecticut.

Traditional furniture makers are, however, finding an audience for their work. In what perhaps is a filtering down of the political climate, Curtis said, there is a resurgence of American design. It appears in everything from an interest in regional American cooking to Ralph Lauren's prairie fashions to country interiors featuring adaptations of folk arts and crafts.

Growing market

With that renewed interest has come a growing market for works by craftsmen who are producing handmade furniture of the same high quality as that made in the studios and shops of 17th and 18th century cabinetmakers.

Witness the debut of Dovetail, one of the first retail stores in the area to specialize in handmade furniture. Located in an old Avon farmhouse that is particularly suited to the endeavor, the shop was opened by Debbie Weinstein and Judy Wick in November. It carries exclusively the works of Eldred Wheeler, a small Hingham, Mass., company of woodworkers who make only reproductions of 18th century pieces, many of which were originally made in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Oringinal Dovetail

Weinstein opened the original Dovetail in Wilton in 1979, and was convinced by the number of customers from this area who traveled to that shop that the demand was sufficient to open a second store.

The reception, Weinstein said, has been excellent. The cost of fine antiques — $30,000 wouldn't be out of line for a Connecticut bonnet-top highboy — has put such pieces out of range for all but the most affluent. A Dovetail reproduction would cost only about a tenth as much. But people still value the designs and workmanship of traditional furniture, she said, especially in Connecticut, where there is a great appreciation for antiques.

Eldred Wheeler (a combination of the last names of the two woodworkers who founded the firm) prides itself, Weinstein said, on producing furniture made very much the way an 18th century cabinetmaker would have worked.

To reproduce a piece such as a Queen Anne highboy, with scrolled detail and carved cabriole legs, they have gone back to the original, using the same techniques and materials.

The correct woods — cherry as the primary wood and wide-board pine for the inside of the drawers — are used. The dovetails and carvings are made by hand. The finish is also faithful to the original, she said, using many layers of shellac to create a transparent finish that shows the grain of the wood. Some of the woods Eldred Wheeler uses, Weinstein said, such as beautifully figured tiger maple and bird's-eye maples, aren't found at all in modern commercial furniture.

"A commercial house won't touch a wood like this," she said. "They want a nice even grain. This ridged grain on the tiger maple can be gouged with a power planer."

Another tradition

While Eldred Wheeler strives to emulate the prosperous New England cabinetmakers' shop, Peter Van Beckum of the Unionville section of Farmington represents another tradition: an artisan working alone to design and produce a piece from start to finish.

For the flexible bowed back of the continuous-arm Windsor chair, he splits his own wood to be sure he gets the straight-grain green oak needed. He hand-dries the end of the bottom stretchers by cooking them in hot sand while leaving the bulbous centers unseasoned so there will be no shrinkage when the ends are connected to the legs. The center section, however, will be a crossway support with a bottom rail, and the shrinkage of the wood in that spot will strengthen the chair. When he is done, he paints the chair with the pale green milk paint requested by his customer.

Such perfection is rare, and such total control of the finished product is impossible even for a small cabinetmaker's shop such as Eldred Wheeler, where a number of people work on a single piece.

Not many are as meticulous, said Curtis. Van Beckum, 32 was a carpenter who became interested in traditional furniture and sought a place to learn classic techniques. He found what he was looking for at the 100-year-old North Bennett Street School in Boston, which has courses in such arcane crafts as violin making.

Perfects craft

After an extensive, two-year training and apprenticeship, he has continued to perfect his craft and his work has been included in such prestigious collections as New American Treasures at the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities in Boston and the Essex Institute in Salem, Mass., where he won the best in show honor at the 1983 Furniture in the Traditional Style exhibition.

Working alone in a converted carriage house, it takes Van Beckum more than a week to finish a pair of Windsor chairs made of oak, maple and pine. When he has finished a project such as that, he says, he feels something akin to postpartum depression.

He makes exact copies, or designs pieces to fit the periods from about 1620 to 1830 in America. He has built furniture in styles that range from early Colonial (sometimes called American Jacobean), to William and Mary, Queen Anne, early Georgian, Chippendale, Hepplewhite, Sheraton and Federal, along with countless transitional and regional variations, from primitive to high style.

Video learning potential is unlimited

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Picture this scenario: You've gone to the home supply outlet and bought materials for an exterior deck.

While you're there, you rent a videotape for the weekend, to demonstrate the techniques and provide the expert tips that make the difference between an easy job well-done and a semi-disaster. Or, you decide to take up the hobby of decoupage and borrow a tape from the public library.

The possibilities for learning by using a television set and a videotape player appear to be almost endless. Several recent developments suggest that the predicted video learning revolution is beginning in home furnishings. They include forthcoming publication of a remodeling videotape, preparation of a video by a manufacturer of bed linens, and introduction of a mail-order video course in painted faux finishes by a distributor of educational programs.

Why now? The answer is to be found in market statistics, which show a growing number of homes with videocassette players, says Russell Morash, executive producer of "This Old House," which originates on public television station WGBH in Boston. Morash has produced three home videos based on popular public television programs, all distributed by book publishers.

"Currently there are about 100 million homes with television and 25 to 30 percent of them are believed to be VCR-capable. The figure is going up perhaps a million a month and it has been predicted that all television homes will have a video player-recorder within five years," he said.

The three video productions on home subjects include the "Julia Child Way to Cook" published by Knopf, "The Victory Garden" released by Crown Publishers, and the forthcoming "This Old House," also published by Crown.

The 60-minute video based on "This Old House" is expected to sell for $24.95 when it appears in bookstores and other outlets this summer. Morash describes the videotape as a collection of a dozen or so home projects. Subjects include adding a deck, installing a light dimmer and refinishing a floor.

Each segment lasts three to four minutes and gives basic information needed to do the job. Morash cited the medium's ability to provide "exquisite detail and clear graphics" as a plus, adding, however, that "it remains to be seen if sales will be large enough to call the ventures a commercial success."

"What I like about video as a home furnishings promotional medium is that it can take us right into the viewer's home and it demonstrates how to decorate," said Joseph Ruggiero, advertising manager for West-Point Pepperell.

The company's 10-minute video, "Your First Home," will be tested as a $3.95 option with the purchase of a full set of Martex sheets at stores in Washington, Los Angeles, Indianapolis and Columbus, Ohio, beginning in May. Other tapes are in production, some made jointly with several decorating magazines, Ruggiero said.

He predicted a bright future for video as a sales promotion tool, not only because of its excellence as an informational medium but also because "VCR's and cable are making the media buyer's job very difficult and television advertising is very expensive."

According to Kathy Finelli of Exar Communications, Inc., distributor of educational videotapes, one drawback to faster development of commercially marketed educational tapes is the lack of outlets to sell or rent them to the public. Mail order has been the most successful sales method for this type of material.

At first, it was thought that learning videos would be sold in video outlets, but most of these are small mom-and-pop operations which do not have the shelf space to carry everything and naturally prefer to concentrate on more popular movies, said Morash.

Jeff Lawenda, co-owner of Chelsea Video, a New York production company, said the development of video as a marketing medium seemed very likely to proceed more rapidly than its development as an informational medium.

One advantage of using the video for sales promotion is the producer may be able to gain financing for a new medium which hasn't yet proven itself.

Morash noted, however, that commercial sponsorship could negatively affect the believability of the material presented. In a sense, it's the old argument of noncommercial versus commercial television all over again. Will the teaching potential of the medium be diluted by its sponsorship? This must remain one of many questions to be considered as the medium gains popularity.

Lions outlast Weston in slugfest

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

WESTON — Weston High baseball coach Cliff Wilson said it best when describing Monday's season-opener with visiting Newton South.

"This was crazy," the Wildcat coach said after his team had lost a 15-14 three-hour affair. "I have never, ever seen a game like this."

Monday's circus had a little bit of everything. There were 26 total hits (three of them triples), 19 total walks, and eight total errors. Three times the teams sent nine or more batters to the plate in an inning. Weston had a seven-run inning. Newton South had a six-run inning. The only thing missing from this one was a touchdown or maybe a three-point field goal.

Newton South got three RBI from Mark Maiocca, Pillan Thirumalaisamy, and Ben Burlingame while the Weston attack revolved around Glen Cort, who smashed in four runs. Wildcat Peter Wilson, a sophomore playing in his first-ever varsity game, plated three.

The first inning should have been an indication of things to come. Weston starter Cort could not find the plate, falling behind in the count on all nine of the Lion batters he faced in the top of the first.

Newton racked the right-hander for four runs on three hits, also taking advantage of two straight booted grounders by fill-in second baseman Adam Berman.

The visitors would expand the lead to 6-0 with two runs off Cort in the third, knocking the senior hurler off the mound in favor of right-hander Tony Benotti.

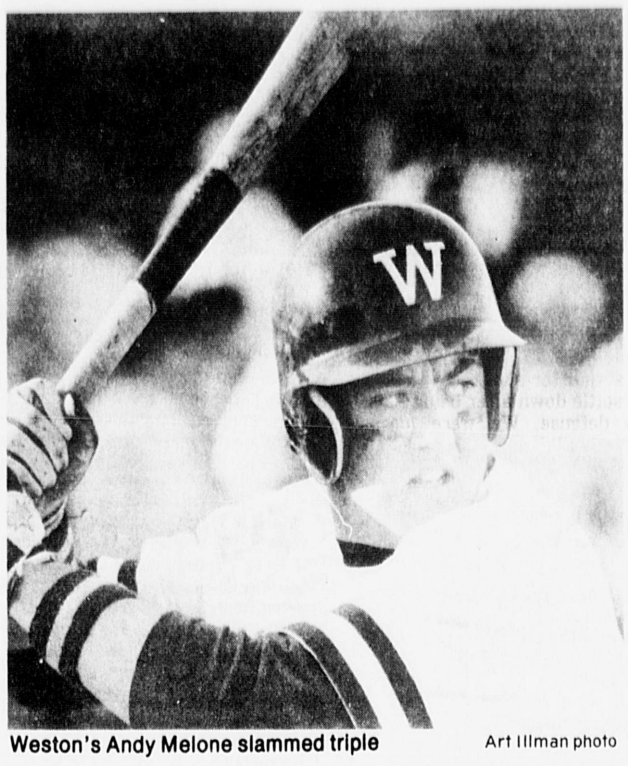

Weston would get the runs back, and a little bit more, in the last of the third with five runs on five hits, prompting Newton South stand-in coach Joe Connelly (rookie head coach Harvey Doneski missed his debut due to a severe muscle pull in his back) to yank starter Tom McGary.

The Wildcats took the lead off reliever John Cappadona in the fourth, scoring twice on a Cort triple for a 7-6 edge, but the Lions would get the advantage back in the top of the fifth, 9-7.

A six-run seventh inning by South, in which Weston reliever Peter Wacker walked in two runs, seemingly put this one out of reach at 15-7, but the Wildcats were not quite ready to concede.

Weston came up with seven runs in the bottom of the seventh, powered by a three-run triple by Wilson.

His shot to deep, deep left cleared the bases and pulled Weston within one, 15-14, with two outs. Pinch hitter Peter Martino, batting for the second time in the inning, forced the count to go the distance before looking at a called third strike that ended this circus.

Actually, Cappadona and his Lion cohorts should have been out of the inning some six batters before Martino fanned. With two outs, Wildcat catcher Ron Watson had bounced one back to Cappadona at the hill, and the pitcher turned towards first, took a few steps to settle himself, then launched an easy out six-feet over the head of first baseman McGary to prolong the inning.

"We showed a lot of spirit," Coach Wilson said after the game. "I really thought it was all over after the top of the seventh. It's funny because this is a game we could have won but never should have been able to win."

Connelly agreed with Wilson that Monday's opener left a lot to be desired, but the acting manager said his team "played all right for a first game. The name of the game is to use two pitchers and to make them throw strikes. We've got to do that and we did."

Newton pitchers walked seven of the 19 total batters walked.

The summary:

NEWTON SOUTH(15)-Monbouquette 5-3, Maiocca 4-1, Pappas 4-1, Cohen 3-1, Thirumalaisamy 5-2, McGary 4-0, Burlingame 4-2, Cappadona 4-2, Doherty 3-0. Tot. 36-12.

Tigers nine loses pair at Walpole

WALPOLE — Walpole coach Bill Tompkins didn't get much sleep on Wednesday. "I was twisting and turning thinking of the ways we could have won the 2-2 tie at Newton. I felt so bad for Gary Gallagher who struck out 17 batters and didn't get the win," said Tompkins before Thursday's continuation of Wednesday's 2-2 tie and the second game which followed.

Last night Tompkins slept like a log. The Rebels broke the 2-2 in top of the eighth inning when they scored three runs, two on a pair of squeeze bunts and one on a line drive single by Tony Scavuzzo for a 5-2 lead which held as Pete Glebus mowed down Newton 1-2-3 in the bottom of the eighth.

Gary Gallagher was the pitcher of record and got the win. All Tompkins could say after the game was "that justice was served."

The regularly scheduled game was not a carbon copy of the initial pitchers' duel. The Rebels pounded out a 14-0 decision as they slashed out 16 hits. Glebus, who had a save in the first game, got the win in the second tilt by allowing two hits and striking out seven.

In the top of the eighth of the first tilt the Rebels quickly broke the 2-2 tie. Mark Manning opened with a walk and Gallagher's sacrifice bunt was misplayed. A pair of squeeze bunts by Scott Melanson and Kevin O'Connell brought home two of the runs with a two-strike single by Scavuzzo bringin home one.

The second game was all Walpole. Glebus had excellent support from his mates at the bat and in the field. The Rebels had 16 hits, including two doubles, a triple and a home run.

With a 3-0 lead going into the third they blew it open as they scored five times. They added six more in the fifth to complete the scoring.

Big hitters for the Rebels were O'Connell, Joe Betro, Manning and Glebus, who each had three.

Dave Murphy and Scavuzzo each had a pair if basehits. The biggest blow was a home run to deep right by Manning. Glebus had a long triple with Gallagher and O'Connell banging out two baggers.

For the Tigers, Ron Coppola slammed a long triple to deep center but was erased trying to stretch it into a home run on a perfect relay from center fielder Murphy to shortstop Betro to catcher Mike Kratochwill, who made a perfect block of the plate nailing the fleet Coppola.

The other Tiger hit was a line drive single to left by Bryan Scales who was erased on an around-the-horn double play started by Gallagher at third.

The summaries:

WALPOLE(5)-K. O'Connell 3-1, Glebus 2-0, Murphy 2-0, Betro 3-0, Manning 1-0, Gallagher 2-1, Scavuzzo 3-1, B. O'Connell 0-0, Kratochwill 4-0, Melanson 3-0. Tot. 23-3.

North trio chosen hockey all-star

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

Rick DeSimone

Rob Arone

Chuck Goldman

When it comes to going out on a limb, the Suburban League hockey coaches would rather not tempt anyone with a saw behind them.

When the coaches got together for their All-Star meeting recently, they came away with not one, not two, but three Most Valuable Players. In addition, they picked 21 players for the All-Star team, with every team but Quincy (which didn't win a league game all season) garnering at least three selections.

Taking a third of the MVP trophy apiece were Brockton's Mark Payson, North Quincy's Dave Tapper and Richie Sheridan of Brookline.

Waltham's three All-Stars were all repeaters. Don Archibald, Jeff Lazaro and Mark Bourgeois made it last year, so it didn't take much convincing to get them back there again.

At the other end of the scale was Newton North's triumvirate, all new to the squad. Rob Arone, Rick DeSimone and Chuck Goldman were the Tiger honorees.

Of course, it may be fitting that the honors were so spread out this season. After all, this was a year in which four league clubs went to the tournament, and six were in the running down to the final three games. In addition, the league championship wasn't decided until the final week with five teams still in the running with two weeks left.

But when the shooting was over, Brockton and North Quincy were one and two, and so it was at the All-Star meeting, when each came away with four selections.

Joining Payson on the team were Boxer teammates Mark Trenovich, Bernie Cassell and Fred McEnroe. Payson was the top scorer in the state this year, with linemate Cassell (only a junior) not far behind.

North Quincy also had a potent attack, and three forwards made the league's top list. Mike Haynes and Dave Fasano joined Tapper up front, and defenseman Greg McGlame rounded out the Red Raider quartet.

Brookline had two other picks to go along with Sheridan, a high-scoring forward who was the difference between the Indians being a .500 club and making the tournament. Cambridge Rindge and Latin also earned three slots, while Quincy had only one player selected.

Newton North stars:

Rob Arone — If there was an opposite to the rushing-type defenseman represented by Lazaro and Bourgeois, the Newton North captain was it. Injured in the preseason, Arone came back to have a great, though largely unnoticed season.

"Starting the season I expected a lot from him," said Coach Jack Heavey. "He's a defenseman's defenseman. He's very good at coverage and breaking the puck out. He's not flashy, but he's always in the right place doing the right thing at the right time and always giving 100 percent."

Arone also improved his shot this year and was a threat from the point, though his numbers (2-8-10) don't stand out. Among Arone's college considerations is Norwich, where he would hope to continue playing.

Rick DeSimone — The Tigers' leading scorer was an emotional key to this year's surprising season, as Heavey explained: "He was certainly a kid that everybody looked to. He controlled a lot of the team. If he was physical, the other kids followed."

DeSimone, who scored 15 goals and added 11 assists for 26 points, played both on the power play and shorthanded, as well as taking a regular shift. His numbers represented quite an improvement over last year's three goals.

"His dream was to beat Waltham twice," said Heavey, "and he was a big part of both wins."

DeSimone won the Suburban League golf title last fall, and is undecided on his college choices.

Chuck Goldman — Only a sophomore, Goldman has a bright future ahead at North. Heavey called the goalie "the most pleasant surprise on our team. He had an awful lot of poise for a sophomore and did a lot of things right. ... He played super."

Though the coach would like him to work a little harder in the offseason on conditioning, Goldman will be a major cornerstone for the next two hockey seasons at North.

In the spring, he plays lacrosse.

Hockey officials honor Levin

Andy Levin, head coach of hockey at Wellesley High School, has been selected as the 1986 recipient of the Officials Award presented by the South Shore hockey officials.

The Massachusetts South Shore Chapter of the National Ice Hockey Officials Association will make the formal presentation at its annual banquet next Tuesday at Lombardo's in Randolph. The selection is based on a coach having exhibited leadership and sportsmanship of himself and his team.

Previous winners of the award have been Robert Hayes of Dartmouth, James Sylvia of Hanover and Robert Lucini of Franklin.

A graduate of Newton South High School and Dartmouth College, Levin began his coaching career as an assistant coach at Hanover High School in Hanover, N.H. After completing one year of graduate school at Boston University, he accpeteaching position at Wellesley High. He started coaching at Wellesley at the freshman level, and did so for six years. Six years ago he assumed the position of varsity head caoch.

Beaver nine has posted 40-2 mark under Papas

Baseball season has begun at Beaver Country Day school. The Beaver Bulldogs played their pre-season tourney at Providence Country Day, and their first home game was played on April 9, against Chapel Hill.

Athletic Director John Papas has coached the Bulldogs for the past four seasons. During that time, his teams have compiled an impressive 40-2 record in league games. The Bulldogs are again this year the defending Eastern League Champions, a title thay have held since Coach Papas' arrival at Beaver.

Papas characterized this year's schedule as "ambitious". It includes 17 varsity games, not counting the pre-season tourney or the class D tournament. The Bulldog's final game is scheduled for May 24.

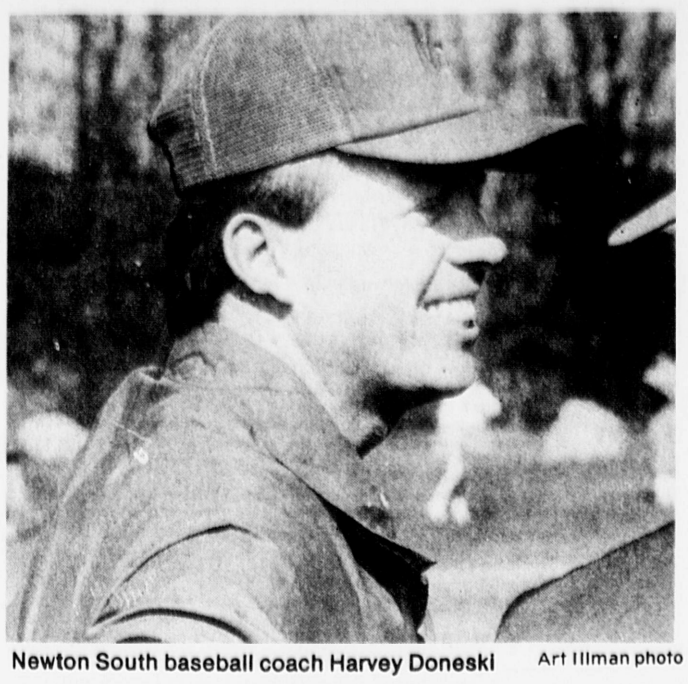

Returning starters include two all-stars and the league M.V.P. Brian Gardiner. Steve Silverman, Noel Fennessey, Matt Caplice, and Kurt Neumann round out the group of five veterans who will form the Bulldog's anchor this season.

According to Papas, the team's performances in the pre-season tourney "gave reason for optimism". Brian Gardiner struck out 16 opposing hitters, and had a home run and a double. The Bulldogs finished third. Outlining his expectations for the team, Papas noted that this year he has a good mix of young players, including one senior, with veterans. "All other teams will be shooting for us this year," said Papas, referring to his team's four year stint as defending Eastern League Champions.

Among the younger players, Papas cited freshman Dave Karofsky, sophomore Jorge Rodriguez, and senior John Fields. Karofsky will be starting, as well as playing varsity, both unusual for a ninth grader. Rodriguez is new to the school, but "is one to watch", says Papas. Fields played with the Bulldogs before, but is a first-year starter. Beaver's baseball program includes a 17 man varsity team, a 20 man J.V. and 30 man third team. Figures for the J.V. and the third include middles schoolers as well, and represent over two-thirds of the boys in grades 7-12.

According to Coach Papas: "Beaver is baseball crazy". He claims the school's "high success rate" with the sport has a good deal to do with the fact that baseball is most the popular sport at Beaver.

"I'm excited about the year. I've got a good group of kids to work with!" said Papas in summing up his expectations for the season. "The pressure of tradition is making itself felt; if they can deal with that, we've got a winning season ahead of us."

Doneski familiar with Newton South baseball program

NEWTON — When a program is successful, a smooth transition is what everyone wants. Players, coaches and athletic directors are much more comfortable if there is no great shakeup when a successful head coach moves on.

Neil McPhee and the Newton South baseball program certainly fall under the "successful" label, and Harvey Doneski would seem to be the man to make the adjustment as painless as possible now that McPhee is doing his coaching at Northeastern University.

Officially confirmed as the new head coach in February, Doneski comes to the Lion varsity after four years of coaching the junior varsity club at the school. He knows the system, knows the players and hopes he knows how to keep South on the move.

"I expect to stick with the same system," said the new coach. "Neil was there 17 years and had a feel for the kids, the parents and the school."

The 39-year-old Billerica resident's baseball experience goes back to his days at Lexington High School. He graduated in 1964, and was the team's Most Valuable Player as a senior. He also played hockey at the school.

From there he went on to Boston College, playing two years of hockey and three years of baseball.

After graduation, Doneski joined the teaching ranks in Waltham. It happened to be the same year Don Prohovich left coaching, which wound up leaving an opening on the freshman baseball squad. Doneski took the job and lasted five years.

After five years there, he took the head job at Babson College where he turned a perennial loser into a .500 team in his three-year stint.

The success continued at Massachusetts Bay College, where he directed that school to the Eastern Mass. Junior College championship in his only season at the helm.

After that, the coach decided to go back to the high school ranks.

"I kind of got discouraged with the facilities and short season at Mass. Bay," he said. "The players were fine but coaching at the high school level with being a teacher is a little easier to do than coach college part-time."

That brought him to South, where he's spent the last four years under McPhee.

"We're pretty good friends," said Doneski of his predecessor. "Those are big shoes to fill but at least I'm familiar with the system and the success they've had over there."

The new coach also had high praise for McPhee: "I've been exposed to a lot of coaching situations and he got the most from the talent he had just by hard work, his own intensity and the work ethic."

Doneski, a math teacher at Waltham High, has had some success of his own at the high school level as well as the hockey coach at Concord-Carlisle for the past five years. He led the Patriots to a tournament berth this winter.

Like most coaches, Doneski puts his emphasis on pitching and defense.

"At the school level there isn't too much you really can do as a coach to develop hitting," he said. "The kids come along and they'll either hit or not hit.

"I'd like to emphasize pitching and defense. ... Pitching and defense you can work on and hopefully improve."

Though Doneski has been around the program and knows most of the players from their time on the junior varsity, his goals are modest.

"I'd just like to win as many games as I can and maintain the excellence they've had there in the past."

Mariano fuels Tigers in lacrosse

NEWTON — Senior midfielder Otto Mariano scored two goals and two assists, keying an early Newton North surge as the Tigers buried visiting Brookline, 10-6, Friday to even their record at 2-2.

Newton North will travel to Weymouth North High on Tuesday (3:30 p.m.) in a rematch of last year's league championship. The Tigers beat the Maroons for the title last year, 12-8, and coach Rick Clark said he expects another test from this season's Weymouth entry.

"It's going to be very tough," Clark said. "Weymouth North has a lot of strength."

Clark said the Tigers are going to have to play better than they have been playing to defeat Weymouth North this time around.

"We have to work tough on our ride, and we have to work on different tupes of slides on defense," Clark said. "We're also going to have to bottle them up and shut down some of their kids. The biggest thing, though, is to control the ball."

It sounds simple, but Clark said he feels his team needs a lot of improvement. The Tigers fell behind early against Brookline on Friday, and it took a four-goal Newton burst to solve the problem.

Brookline scored twice within the first two minutes before the Tiger attack clicked. Mariano scored his first to get Newton on the board, taking a feed from in front before bouncing the ball into the Brookline net from the corner at 2:30.

Brian Claflin bounced home his first of two on the day to tie the score seven minutes into the game, and John Flynn took a Mariano feed and whipped home an extra-man goal to put the Tigers in the lead to stay, 3-2 with 5:50 left in the first.

Flynn's goal, his first of two, was one of a pair of man-advantage scores for the Tigers on Friday. Newton had eight extra-man situations, and Clark said he would like to see more scoring with the power play edge.

"We still need to improve," he said. "I'd like to score on 100 percent of our extra-mans, but I'd settle for 40 percent."

Dave Robinson pumped in a goal on a Mariano lead-pass to put Newton North up 4-1 to close out the scoring in the first period.

"I was pleased with the comeback," Clark said of North's first-quarter surge. "We started to settle down after being foolish on defense. We were too aggressive."

The Tigers upped the spread to 6-2 in the second quarter before Brookline got one back to close out the half, 6-2 Newton. Josh Carpenter scored on a man-advantage and Andy Soucie rifled home an outside shot for the Newton North scores.

Brookline made a run at the North lead in the third quarter, scoring twice to cut the spread to 6-4, but Mariano added his second goal on a pass from Flynn to give the Tigers a three-goal cushion.

Flynn iced the decision, closing out the third with a goal off a pass from Robison.

Claflin scored from Mark Adams in the fourth quarter, and Chuck Leone finished things off with a score with 20 seconds remaining.

On defense, Clark said Doug Proia and Scott Lanciloti both played an impressive game, as well as netminder Matt Keegan.

"We were a little bit more consistent on defense," Clark said. "We had 25 shots and they (Brookline) didn't have too many offensive opportunities."

South wins first

John Gleason scored a key goal in the third period to nudge open a close game as Newton South dumped host Peabody, 6-4.

The Tanners had swapped a pair of goals with Whitney Dorf before Rama Malone, in his first game at attack, finally gave the Lions a 3-2 lead at halftime. Malone was assisted by Chris Berwind.

But in the third only one goal was scored, and it came off the stick of Gleason, a junior attack. Malone had a hand in this one as well, feeding Gleason from behind the net. Gleason's quick stick made it 4-2 and the Lions were on their way.

Fourth-period scores by Dave Abroms and Neil Schwartz (from Malone) enabled South to hold off a late rush by Peabody, which used two Mike Craig goals to cut the final margin to two.

Newton coach Paul Murphy said Malone, only a sophomore, did "very well," in his first game up front. Senior middie Schwartz also stood out.

Alex Levine made 15 saves in the South net, leading another strong defensive effort.

"We've been playing very well defensively," the coach said. "We need to get untracked offensively. The shots are starting to come."

The Lions get a week off after their first win against two losses, before playing next Monday against Waltham.

Theodore comes through for Lion girls

SUDBURY — It's not often that four hits can produce seven runs, but Newton South softball coach Larry Caranfa doesn't look a gift horse in the mouth.

Caranfa's Lions beat out just four hits, but took advantage of nine base on balls and a five errors by Lincoln-Sudbury Friday, all in improving their record to 3-1 with a 7-6 Dual County League victory.

South's hero was catcher Dede Theodore, who singled in two runs and squashed an L-S suicide squeeze at the plate in the bottom of the seventh to end the game.

Theodore keyed the South attack, driving home Michelle Meyers and Laura Baumberg, both who had walked, in a three-run second inning.

Lincoln pulled to within one in the bottom of the second and South added an insurance run in the third. Lincoln tied the game with a two-run bottom half before Newton scored three runs in the fifth to take a 6-4 lead.

Two errors, a pair of walks, and a passed ball scored the South runs in the fifth.

Then, Lincoln pulled to within one with a pair of runs in the last of the seventh. The Warriors threatened further with runners on second and third with two outs, but a heads up play by catcher Theodore on a suicide bunt ended the contest.

With two strikes against her, Kris Demille dropped a bunt out in front of the plate, and instead of risking the bad throw to first, Theodore calmly picked the ball up and tagged the runner breaking for home.

"Dede did a nice job," Caranfa said after the game. "Instead of making the throw on a cold day, she made the tag. She could have easily thrown the ball away."

Maria Crovo picked up the win for South, pitching seven innings of eight hit ball.

North drops opener

Right-hander Denise Blasi shut down Newton North on only two hits as the Tiger softballers lost their opener, 11-1, to visiting Wakefield on Friday at North.

The hard-throwing Warrior coughed up only a run-scoring single to Jen Heesch in the second and a harmless hit to Lisa Quigley in the fourth. She struck out six and walked only two.

The Warriors scored all the runs they would need in the first, crossing the plate three times on four hits, one error and a walk.

The Tigers made it 3-1 with their only run in the second, when Sharon Silva walked, went to second on a bunt, and scored on Heesch's hit up the middle.

Cathedral rips erring Lancers

Newton Catholic coach Don Dabenigno had to search out a team to play on Friday in the baseball opener, since his club wasn't supposed to begin until this week, but based on the results, he may wish he had waited for the originally scheduled opener.

The Lancers lost to Cathedral, 10-3, at Cabot Park, as they made five errors and issued 10 walks.

"We weren't ready to play," said the coach. "We took 39 called strikes in the game."

That came in only six innings, as the game was called due to darkness.

The visitors finished off the competition with five runs in the third inning on only two hits. The Lancers contributed four walks and two miscues in the frame. Kevin Perris had the key hit for the winners, driving in a pair.

The summary:

Balloon mortgage not always top alternative

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

I'd like to refinance my home, but there are so many different kinds of mortgages out there that it's difficult to make the most appropriate choice. For example, what is the main disadvantage of a balloon mortgage? And how do I decide between a 15-year and a 30-year mortgage?

R.L., Waltham

Dear R.L.:

On a balloon mortgage, monthly payments are based on a fixed interest rate, usually short term. Payments may cover interest only, with principal due in full at the term's end. This offers low monthly payments, but possibly very little equity until the loan is fully paid. When due, the loan must be paid off or refinanced, which involves having to pay closing costs again. Refinancing poses high risks if rates climb.

There are many other ways of financing, or refinancing a home. The question most often raised, however, has to do with the difference between a 30-year and a 15-year mortgage.

Because the monthly carrying costs are higher on a 15-year mortgage, you probably can't qualify for as much house as you can with a loan twice that long. For example, the monthly payment on a $75,000 mortgage financed over 15 years at 11.5 percent is roughly $875, compared with about $770 for 30-year financing at 12 percent. That means you'd need at least $5,000 more of annual income to get the same house using the shorter loan.

If you're willing to make the higher payments, you don't have to get a 15-year loan to reap at least some of the savings in interest — which in this example amount to $120,000 over the life of the mortgage. On most 30-year mortgages you can pay ahead on the principal as much as you like without penalty. So you could take out the 30-year loan, make the $875 payments as if it were a 15-year loan and drop back to $770 whenever things got tight.

If you expect to move in two or three years, then an adjustable rate mortgage may make more sense than a 15-year loan because it starts out at a lower interest rate. With a 2 percent annual interest-rate cap, you should do well for the short term.

British troops prep for Patriots Day battles

By Cathy McGee
Transcript Correspondent

WALPOLE — This year Fred DeConinck from Walpole will rise with the sun in the morning mist to take part in a Revolutionary War battle re-enactment — the Battle of Lexington Green.

He will experience Patriots Day — one day early — April 20 with a 6 a.m. gunfire salute to a vast army scattered across the Buttrick Farm hillside, overlooking the Old North Bridge in Concord.

The "shot heard 'round the world" will be fired as the first battle of the American Revolution is brought back to life.

DeConinck will be there with about 15,000 other "toy" soldiers who all share a common hobby. They take part in Revolutionary War battle re-enacting.

"I was very impressed by it," DeConinck said of a dramatization of the 1775 Battle of Lexington Green he witnessed three years ago.

"We're the ones in the red coats," DeConinck said.

In June, Bristol, R.I., is the setting for one of their biggest re-enactments — a two-hour battle. The Battle at Lexington Green, however, only lasts 15 minutes on average.

"Everything is accurate — a planned battle with a definite winner and loser," said DeConinck. "Actually you're putting on a show for the public. There are about 50,000 patriotic spectators who come and watch."

The Battle of Monmouth in New Jersey brings in a similar number of spectators. Women can participate but must play their part and wear 18th century clothing. "It's a weekend event — we camp and there's no 20th century thing allowed," DeConinck said.

Their 18th century-style tents are not purchased at "Tent City." They are made by hand from white linen or deerskin. The troops prepare their food in iron pots and kettles over open fires. There was no such thing as Julia Child in the 1700s.

He said it takes about six months to learn how to handle the musket properly. The musket must be elevated at a 45 degree angle, which ensures safety.

A battle re-enactment is an educational, historical experience for the participants and the onlookers. The sights and sounds dramatize the meaning of the Revolution and instill a sense of the American past in both the children and the adults who come to watch, DeConinck said.

Historically, the 10th Regiment of Foot was garrisoned in Boston during the 1700s and took part in the Battle of Lexington on April 19, 1775. Massachusetts later designated April 21 to represent Patriot's Day.

Originally, the re-enactments were conducted with British troops who were borrowed from Connecticut and New York to fight against the Minutemen. This ultimately proved to be unsatisfactory.

A dejected colonel leads his reactivated British 10th of Foot Regiment from the battlefield after being trounced by a larger colonial force in an April 19 reenactment at (THESE are out of state photos)

He signed up with the recruiters who canvass the crowd of battle spectators assembled at Lexington Green every Patriots Day. Since then he has been participating in Revolutionary War battles as a member of the British 10th Regiment of Foot. But there wouldn't be a battle without their foes, the Colonial Lexington Minutemen.

Jason Koreli, managing editor of the Parkway and West Roxbury Transcripts and a resident of Concord, reactivated the companies of Minutemen back in 1962.

In the 10th Regiment, there are three companies: the Light Infantry, which fought in the brush; the Battalion, which wears the "tri-con" hats; and the Grenadiers, the elite troops who wear the bearskin hats.

The April 20 Patriots Day battle begins at dawn in Concord and will rage through Lincoln and Lexington. The battle re-enactments can last anywhere from 12 minutes to as long as 45 minutes at any one sight. The day-long, grueling battle events end at the Jason Russell House in Arlington at 3:30 p.m.

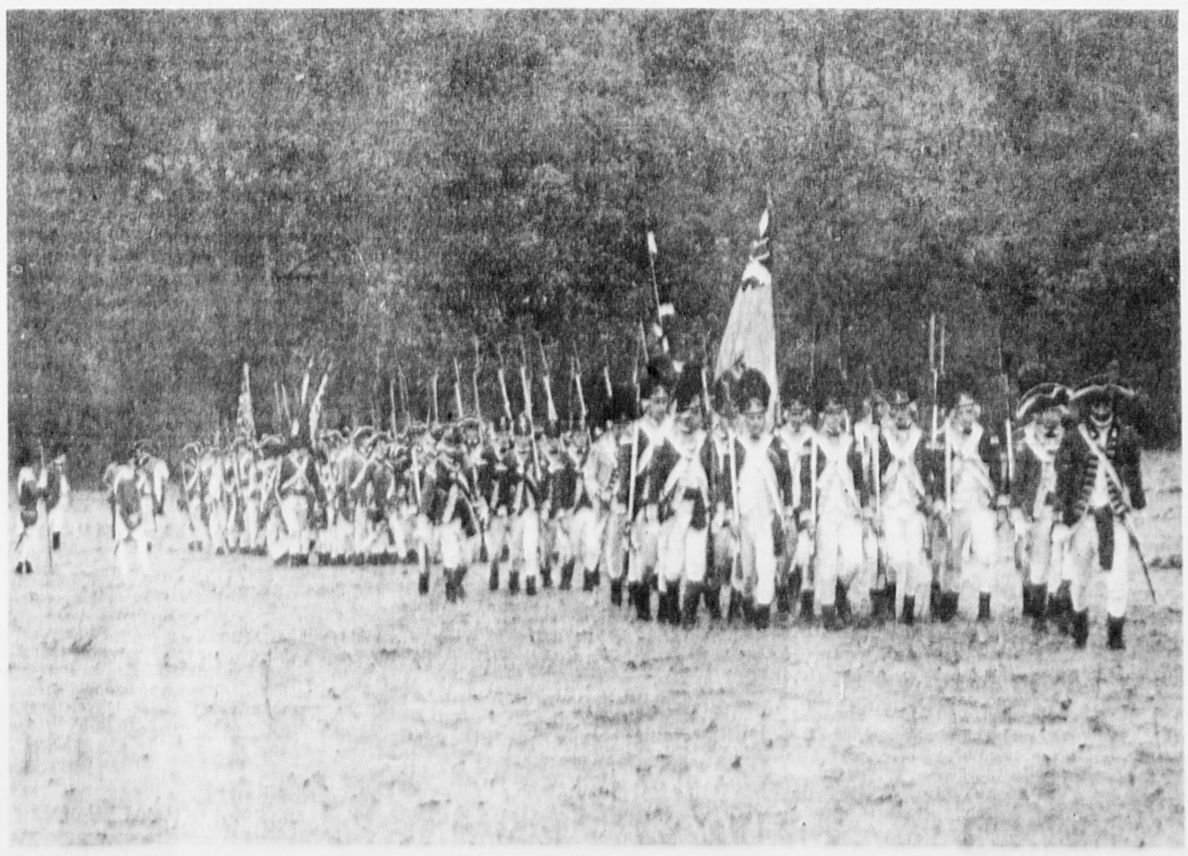

"Unless you've seen one (battle) you really can't visualize what is going on," DeConinck said. There aren't dead men lying around as there are in the longer battles — but there is real live gun fire and men dressed as authentic Revolutionary combatants.

"There's a great deal of safety. In the three years I've been in it there have never been any accidents," DeConinck said. "It's safer than any sport activity."

So in 1967, Vincent J-R Kehoe from Chelmsford established the re-activated British regiment.

The re-activated unit is recognized in England by the original regiment, which still exists. The regiment also served as the "Guard of Honor" for Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip when they visited Massachusetts in 1976.

The $700-$1,000 expense to each "soldier" for the battle attire does not hinder DeConinck. It covers reproductions of the authentic uniforms, which are custom-made at Dixie Gunworks in Tennessee. The price also includes the actual reproduction of a Belgium flintlock muskets, leather belts and cases, brass buckles, a hat, and a human-hair wig. Members who join the regiment can put $100 down on the uniform package and pay throughout the year.

Three little words

No experience necessary

. . . that simply means we want you. We want who you are — not where you've been, or what you did for someone else.

If you're enthusiastic, energetic — and looking for a break, a chance — we should talk.

We might just have 2 little words waiting for you — "you're hired." Stop in at the store and ask for the Store Manager.

Respite services provide home care

Mr. Johnson (not his real name) is 71 years old and has Alzheimer's Disease. He has had the disease for a few years and his condition has deteriorated over the past year. Now, he is no longer able to stay home alone.

Physically, he is in excellent health and enjoys getting out daily for a walk, escorted by someone so he does not wander. But, Alzheimers disease has caused him to be very confused and repetitive. He has a very difficult time remembering names and carries a pen and a notebook with him so he can write notes to himself. As a result, he becomes very frustrated and agitated. He cannot be left alone in the house because he becomes very frightened and anxious that he will not be taken care of and his children will not come home. He cannot cook because he forgets to turn off the stove and the burners. He has difficulty dressing because he cannot remember where his clothes are kept. He needs an escort when he goes out for a walk because he cannot remember how to find his way home. Mr. Johnson needs constant supervision because he cannot take care of himself. He would have to be institutionalized if his children did not take care of him.

Mr. Johnson lives with his son and has a daughter who lives nearby. Both have provided a tremendous amount of daily support to their father and are responsible for his care, assisting him with his personal care, escorting him on short walks, providing meals. They manage all his personal and financial affairs as well as provide him with transportation. They also assist him with household tasks and laundry. It has been difficult for them to juggle their time around their father. They have both needed time away from their responsibilities and the daily stresses of dealing with their father.

While Mr. Johnson was in the hospital, a social worker referred the family to West Suburban Elder Services for Respite Services.

A case worker called the Johnsons a short time later and set up an appointment for a home visit. The case manager found that there was a definite need for respite services and assigned Norma Cushman, a professionally-trained respite worker from SWES, to the case.

Norma sees Mr. Johnson Thursday evenings from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. Norma has interested Mr. Johnson in numerous activities such as playing scrabble, reminiscing about the past, looking at family photographs, and watching TV. She states that "this is a family that loves and cares for one another touchingly . . . they accept me as a friend. In fact, I think Mr. Johnson doesn't realize that I am from WSES and has subsequently decided that I am his friend. He constantly forgets my name and seems well aware that I am someone who is there fairly often."

The Johnsons have found the Respite Program at WSES to be a tremendous relief to them in dealing with the responsiblity of their father's care. They look forward to Thursday evenings when they know that this time is theirs. In fact, they have asked for additional service during the week and two additional respite workers will be servicing Mr. Johnson.

Respite Care is one of many services provided as part of the Home Care Program at West Suburban Elder Services. WSES receives funding for Respite through the Executive Office of Elder Affairs. Respite has been a service offered through the state-funded home care program since April 1985. The purpose of Respite Care is to prevent unnecessary institutionalization by providing assistance to caregivers under stress. Respite Care is intended to benefit families providing the care required by severely impaired elders on a daily basis. Respite Care includes the following services: companion, homemaker, personal care homemaker, home health aide, skilled nursing, social day care, adult day health, and short term institutional care.

The need for respite services is determined by a case manager who completes a comprehensive needs assessment to determine eligibility for respite based on the needs of the client and the needs of the elder. In order to be eligible for the Respite Program, a client must be over 60 years of age, live in the WSES service area, and have a caregiver who is the provider of daily care for the eligible elder.

Respite services can be provided seven days a week, days and evenings, on a regular basis to relieve daily stresses, in emergencies, planned special circumstances, or to enable the caregiver to take a vacation. Service can be provided for anywhere from a few hours or for several weeks. The service that is provided is determined by the needs of the elder and the family.

Anyone interested in respite or other services provided at WSES should contact the information and referral department at 926-4100.

Bank raffling trip to Bermuda

NEWTON — Two lucky people will win an all-expense paid trip to beautiful Bermuda in a drawing to be held at the Lincoln office of West Newton Savings Bank on May 2, according to Bank President Robert P. Lurvey.

The trip for two includes a four-day, three-night stay at the world famous Princess Hotel in Hamilton, Bermuda.

In addition, nine people will win an evening for two at Boston's Wang Center for the Performing Arts, to see and hear the performance of the internationally acclaimed Julliard String Quartet.

The prizes and other festivities planned, according to Judith Day, branch officer of the bank's Lincoln Office, are in celebration of the office's recent renovation and expansion.

To be eligible to win either the Bermuda trip or the concert tickets, simply complete an official entry blank when visiting the new bank facilities between now and May 2.

All drawing will be held at the Lincoln office of West Newton Savings Bank. Tickets for the Julliard String Quartet's Jordan Hall performance will be given away in drawings held on Fridays, April 11, 18 and 25. Grand Prize drawings for the Bermuda trip will take place on Friday, May 2.

People under age 18, and employees of West Newton Savings Bank and their immediate families are not eligible. Winners need not be present at the drawings to claim prize.

IMAGINE KNOWING THAT TODAY IS THE BEST DAY YOU'LL EVER HAVE.

If you had a progressive neuromuscular disease, every tomorrow would bring you greater weakness and more muscle waste. And the best day you could hope for would be the one you were having right now.

That's because most neuromuscular diseases progress day by day, gradually wasting a patient's muscles away. This muscle degeneration can't be halted. And, it can never be reversed.

At the Muscular Dystrophy Association, we're striving to put an end to twelve forms of muscular dystrophy and twenty-eight other neuromuscular diseases. Because we believe there are no incurable diseases—just diseases for which cures haven't yet been found. And because it's the only way that tens of thousands of people with neuromuscular disease can look forward to a better tomorrow.

The original 'Dr. Feelgood'

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

WEST NEWTON — The service is still there, but that one-of-a-kind smile is gone for good.

Going to the post office in West Newton is just another errand now. It used to be one of the most therapeutic exercises in town, but Jim Spikes, the "Dr. Feelgood" of West Newton Square, retired on March 28th after 40 years with the post office.

With his big, bright smile and his line of positive patter, Spikes proved, over the years, that he could turn any frown upside down. If you walked into his office feeling like Crabby Appleton, you walked out looking like Rainbow Bright.

Jim Spikes with 'Chico'

Positive, personal treatment was an integral part of his job description for Spikes. "If someone was irritated, I'd just give them a deeper smile," he said last week, sitting in the living room of his River Street home and looking back on the last four decades. "After all, you're there to give a service.

"Sometimes I would ask people, 'Don't you feel better when people treat you nice?' ... What do you gain by proving a person is wrong? It takes more muscles than a smile."

The roots of Spikes' positive attitude run deep. "It was a situation going back to the bible: Do unto others ...," he said. Born across the street from the Myrtle Baptist Church 61 years ago, he has continued his family's deep involvement with the church. His father, Winthrop Orpheus Spikes, Sr., born on the corner of Henshaw and Cherry streets in 1895, was the clerk of the church. His mother was a deaconess. Spikes has been a deacon there since 1953, and a member of the male choir.

As it turns out, the post office is an ideal laboratory to study how much satisfaction can be derived from a four-decade stint of translating deep religious faith into good works on a daily basis. "I would like to thank all the people I served," is the inimitable way Spikes, one of the brighter lights of West Newton Square, puts it.

He has been amply cited for his positive contribution to the life of the West Newton community. He has an envelope packed with citations from the Postal Department. Even dearer to him is a 1976 clipping from the old Herald-

The race still has a heart

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

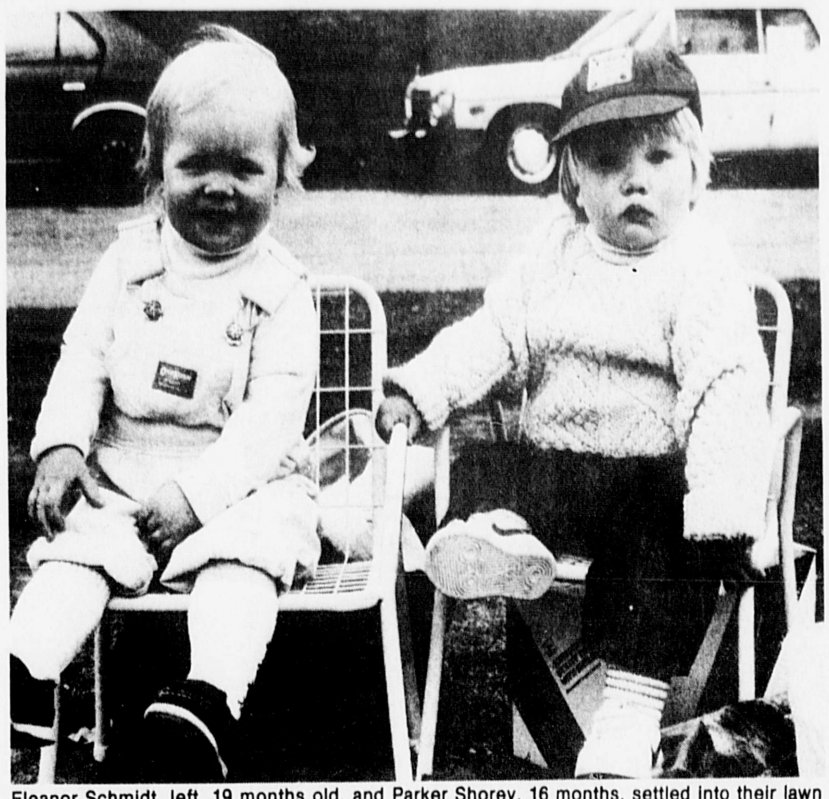

NEWTON — While Hopkinton can claim the start and Boston can claim the finish, the Garden City still boasts the heart of the Boston Marathon: Heartbreak Hill.

Although the annual classic has changed a lot over the past year, the spirited scene on that grueling stretch of Commonwealth Avenue was the same one that Johnny Kelly, Sr., saw in his very first race.

The anticipation that was building all Monday morning reached a crescendo as the first wheelchair racer reached Hearbreak Hill.

Beginning down at City Hall, infectious cheering worked up Commonwealth Avenue as Andre Viger of Quebec wheeled up the sloping section of the marathon route that looms like a stone wall 20 miles from the Hopkinton starting line. The grimace on Viger's face provided inspiration to the screaming throng of race fans who pushed against ropes lining the street.

Aldermen tell mayor:

Restore school budget

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The aldermanic Programs and Planning Committee has recommended that Mayor Theodore D. Mann restore $1 million of his cuts from next year's School Department budget.

Programs and Planning voted 5 to 0 last week in support of Alderman William Shaevel's resolution to give the schools $1 million more than Mann's recommended $45.2 million fiscal 1987 budget.

The committee came to its decision after a grueling five-hour analysis of the department's 96-page, $46.4 million budget request.

Also present were the School Committee, members of the aldermanic Finance Committee and more than 50 school employees and interested citizens.

Early in the evening, School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile said he wanted the Board of Aldermen to recommend restoration of every cut Mann had made.

> 'As taxpayers, we know fully well that the reputation of the school system ... keeps the property values high.'
> Buzz Birnbaum, PTA

Aldermen have the power to reduce the mayor's school budget, but they can only advise him to make additions. Any advisory resolution approved by a committee must be backed by the full board.

Gentile said he is pleased with the committee vote even though it would mean $180,000 less than the School Department wants.

"I'm gratified and appreciative that they voted to recommend restoring a large amount of the budget," said Gentile.

If the board supports the advisory resolution and Mann accepts it, the department should be able to sustain the $180,000 cut, Gentile said. "I'm sure we could find the rest of the money to come up with a balanced budget," Gentile added.

The motion that passed did not state how the city would fund the additional $1 million, a fact that caused some concern for Gentile and School Supt. John Strand.

After the meeting, Strand said he fears some of the money might come from this year's surplus cash.

SJC ousts Iodice suit

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has thrown out a Newton-based test case on the government policy of linkage that requires housing developers to set aside some units for low-income and elderly tenants.

The justices ruled last week that developer Michael F. Iodice, who filed a lawsuit challenging Newton's 10 percent ordinance, failed to act within the specified 20-day time limit. Therefore, his challenge to the linkage ordinance, which has been hailed as a possible model for other communities, was void.

The action leaves unclear whether Bay State municipalities can use such a law to force developers to provide some subsidized housing in return for granting municipal permission to build.

"I'm disappointed in the result, obviously, but also

Passover not history yet for Ethiopian Jews

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

WASHINGTON D.C. — Passover, "pesach" in Hebrew, commemorates the exodus from Egypt, the land of oppression. While Jews remember that journey annually with the seder, or passover dinner, some people think there is more to the holiday than remembering what happened more than 50 centuries ago.

"I think that as people recite the Passover seder, they are reminded about what the Jews went through in Egypt," Newton native Barbara Gaffin says. "It is not enough to remember what happened back then, because the situation is still the same for Jews in many places in the world today."

> 'I knew that as soon as I learned of their suffering I couldn't go on living without doing something.'
> Barbara Gaffin

Describing herself as "always being an activist for Jewish causes," Gaffin, 32, now lives in the Washington D.C. area with her husband Doug Kahn, an aide to Congressman Barney Frank. In 1978 she began alerting the American Jewish community to the plight of the Ethiopian Jews who were beset by persecution in addition to the starvation being faced by all Africans.

"No one was allowed out of Ethiopia, no matter what religion they were," she says. "During the famine, the Jews heard that they were able to get out of the country. They began escaping en masse but ended up in refugee camps in neighboring Sudan. Over the course of four years,

Dad's hesitant, but ...

The kid's a contender

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

WORCESTER — Most fathers are flattered when the kid decides to take up the old man's line of work. After all, it's sort of a compliment from the child to the father when he choses to follow in his footsteps.

It is a slightly different situation in the DeNucci household. For Angelo Joseph, state representative and former middleweight boxing contender, fatherly pride is mixed with the trepidation of one who's been there. The reason for the confusion is 14-year-old son Joseph Anthony's announcement two months ago that he was taking up the sweet science in earnest.

"I was shocked," the elder DeNucci says of the younger's passion for his former vocation. "I really didn't want Joey to become too seriously involved in boxing. It's a rough sport. I know, I've been in the ring."

By now, it is far too late for the father to talk the son out of the ring, at least for this evening. Both are in Worcester where Joey is fighting Paul Wilson for a chance to go to the Junior Olympic regional finals in Lake Placid this summer. Walking around the weigh-in room of the Ionic Avenue Boys Club, Angelo Joseph DeNucci takes in the sights and smells of the sport that "made me what I am today" and remembers when he was just breaking in as a high school junior back in 1957.

"I remember what it was like," he says of his introduction to the fight game. "I'm glad that I'll never have to go through it again."

There is a flurry of activity in this room as 32 young amateur fighters get taped up, laced up and ready for their bouts. Trainers and managers offer fighters last minute advice. Hardbitten 11-year-olds weighing no more than 80 pounds prance around the room, waving their gloves in the air like would-be champs. The hectic scene in the boys club is an updated version of a Bowery Boys movie.

"Defense, kid," trainer Kennedy Clark tells young Joey DeNucci. "You gotta remember defense." Clark and Sil Paulini of the Natick Boxing Club have taken the American, a regular column devoted to "good news." It states that the most recent hike in the price of stamps, to 13¢ apiece, is "not upsetting" West Newton residents "thanks to Jim Spikes." It describes him as "the kind of guy who perks up your day if you happen to be down in the dumps."

One of Spikes' regular customers framed the column and brought it into the post office as a present. That kind of give-and-take was a regular feature of the West Newton post office during his tenure there.

Spikes started with the Postal Department in 1946, after he left the Navy. He served in the Seabees, supplying the Seventh Fleet in the Admiralty Islands and Subic Bay.

Actually, he originally turned to the same trade as his father, who worked in he West Newton post office for 22 years, until 1942, while he was going to school for his real estate broker's license. When he married Florence, who came here from Lake Charles, Louisiana, he turned all his energies to his work in the Postal Department. His marriage "meant I had to have a regular source of income, not a commission here and a commission there."

To date, his marriage has yielded seven grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. Florence says she is glad she came to West Newton years ago to visit a friend. Otherwise, "I wouldn't have met him," she says with a smile at her husband of 36 years.

Spikes' immediate plans include nurturing a good sized garden in his back yard and getting back to his fishing and golf. He also hopes to revive his real estate career, for which he has kept his license all these years. "I don't intend to stop working because I retired from the post office," he said. "I'm too young for that."

(Jim Spikes called the Newton Graphic offices several days after the interview to add something about his future plans: "My primary aim in life is to do the will of God, whatever it may be. Serving God has always been my first and foremost career ... the most rewarding and where I get the most joy.")

Dr. Sachar to receive award

WALTHAM — Dr. Abrams L. Sachar of Newton, the founding president of Brandeis University and a noted historian, has been named the recipient of the American Jewish Historical Society's Emma Lazarus Statue of Liberty Award.

The award is presented by the society to an individual who made major contributions to the understanding of the immigrant's role in American life, according to Morris Soble, president.

Sachar, the son of immigrants, will receive the award at the Emma Lazarus Statue of Liberty Award Dinner in Boston on June 9. Secretary of the Interior Donald P. Hodel will be keynote speaker at the event.

"Abram Sachar has made enormous contributions as both an historian and as the first president of the only Jewish-sponsored university in the United States," Soble said.

Sachar served as the president of Brandeis during the university's first 20 years and today plans an ongoing role in the life of the institution as chancellor emeritus.

He is the author of a number of books, including the classic A History of the Jews, A Host at Last, Redemption of the Unwanted, and Factors in Jewish History.

Before joining Brandeis in 1948, he served as national director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, a Jewish student organization with chapters on more than 200 American campuses.

He has received more than 30 honorary degrees and is a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, member of the Board of Trustees of the American Jewish Historical Society, and a member of the American Council on Education.

Dr. Sachar and his wife, Thelma, live in Newton.

B'nai B'rith takes a stand

NEWTON — B'nai B'rith, at a recent Massahusetts committee meeting of its state-wide legislative committee, decided to focus on opposing two amendments to the Mass. Constitution: one that would allow state financial aid to private and parochial schools, and another that would limit womens rights to reproductive choice.

According to Murray Reiser, of Boston, and a member of the committee, "We'd like to impress upon the legislature that the separation of church and state is important as a basis for democracy and that public schools themselve need much financial help from the state."

Attending the meeting from B'nai B'rith included Irving Karelitz, from Newton, and Leo Sacher, from Chestnut Hill.

Plans were also made and subcommittees set up to investigate B'nai B'rith's potential support for bills to increase affordable housing, increase the availibility of day care, to limit the state budget, and to allow Soviet Jewish doctors to more easily attain medical licenses in the State of Massachusetts.

B'nai B'rith, the world's oldest and largest Jewish community service and action organization, not only sponsors the Anti-Defamation League, the B.B.Y.O., and Hillel, but is also involved locally in project H.O.P.E. which provides food and seder for many Jews in the Greater Boston area who would not be able to have this.

For more information about B'nai B'rith, contact the New England office, 34 Washington St., Brighton, Mass. 02146 or call 731-5290.

Elderly couple tied up during robbery

CHESTNUT HILL — Two men forced their way into a Newbrook Circle home for a daring daylight robbery last week, holding an elderly couple at gunpoint after tying them up in their bedroom, police said.

An undetermined amount of jewelry and money was taken, according to police, who said the victims were shaken but not injured.

Police said two men rang the couple's doorbell about 12:30 p.m. Corinne Krinsky, who is about 65, was pushed inside the house and knocked down by the intruders after she answered the door, according to police.

"It happened. It's over and we're okay. Thats what's important," Krinsky said.

One of the suspects was armed with a handgun, according to police. After tying the couple's hands and ankles with rope, the suspects ransacked the house, police said.

The intruders spent about a half hour in the house, ripping two telephone wires from the wall before they left, police said.

A neighbor called the police when she heard the Krinskys call for help after the suspects fled the scene.

Through a window, police saw the couple bound in the bedroom of their ranch-style home when they searched the premises. Corinne Krinsky was able to make her way to the door to let the officers in, Lt. James O'Donnell said.

Home invasions in Newton are rare, but not unheard of, Chief William F. Quinn said.

"We seem to get perhaps one a year, but it's been a long time since we've had such an incident in the daytime," he said. "The suspects were in the house for a half hour, which is not uncommon in incidents such as this. They feel relatively safe, to a certain extent, because one can keep a lookout."

Quinn said the victims gave police a good description of the suspects, and composite sketches are being made.

One suspect is described as six feet tall, thin, wearing a gray hooded sweatshirt, dark pants and sneakers. The other suspect, called "Joe" by his partner, is about 20 years old, five feet, six inches tall, wearing a red jersey and a brown jacket. Both men are black.

"We're compiling pictures that fit the descriptions and then we'll have the victims take a look at them," Quinn said.

Terrorism fears ground students' trip

NEWTON — Just hours before 62 South High School students were set to fly to England last week, school officials, fearing possible Libyan retaliation to the U.S. attack on that country, cancelled the trip on the grounds that international travel by Americans at this time is unsafe.

"It was a tough call," School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile said of the decision to ground the tour of England, Scotland and Wales by two South chorale groups.

"The kids were planning for this for a long time, but I don't think we are being overly cautious," he said. "There is a very tense situation in the world right now and the administration decided that it is just not safe for our students to be travelling to England because of possible retaliation for that country's part in the attack."

In addition to cancelling the trip, school officials are working to bring home an undisclosed number of North High School students currently in France, Italy and England to prevent them from being targets of any possible reprisal from Libyan strongman Mohamar Khadafi.

North Principal Marya Levenson would not comment on plans to bring those students home, nor would she comment on whether a 10-day trip by 18 North student musicians planned for April 28 would be cancelled.

School Superintendent John Strand said he made the decision to ground the trip after consulting with "federal officials, including United States Congressman Barney Frank."

Alderman Susan Basham, whose daughter Rachel was one of the students set to leave, said she would have preferred making the decision herself.

Board wants to settle cop's suit

NEWTON — The city and a West Newton woman training to be a police officer may settle a sex discrimination suit she is pressing because she was passed over for a job in 1982.

The aldermanic Finance Committee voted 7 to 0 last week to pay Judith A. Nortartomaso $20,000 to settle her lawsuit.

The Law Department requested funds for the settlement. The full Board of Aldermen must approve their request.

The committee discussed the matter in executive session and Chairman Paul Coletti later reported the unanimous vote.

Nortartomaso, 39, of 51 Wildwood Ave., filed the suit in Middlesex Superior Court last August.

In 1982, her name appeared on a civil service hiring list, but she was passed over for "other candidates who we felt were better qualified," Assistant City Solicitor Michael Baseman has said.

Nortartomaso was about to be appointed a police cadet in the fall of 1984, but she failed the requirements of a physical conducted by City Physician John T. LaRossa.

The West Newton woman has said she weighed six pounds more than the civil service standard.

Her name appeared near the top of the list in 1985. She passed another physical and was appointed in January as a cadet along with a second woman and two men. When news of her suit broke last month, Nortartomaso was taking a 16-week Boston Police Academy training course.

Baseman has said one reason her name appeared so high on the 1985 list was a statue that gives preference to relatives of police officers who died in the line of duty.

Her father, Michael F. Greeley, was a 34-year veteran of the police force who died in the line of duty on Christmas day 1970.

Also contributing to Nortartomaso's favorable placement on the list was a Civil Service Commission decision that she may have been improperly bypassed when she applied for the job in 1982.

City expects huge savings in oil prices

NEWTON — The city expects to benefit from plummeting oil prices by savings that could average $8,000 to $10,000 per week this year.

Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, estimated the city would spend roughly $400,000 to $500,000 less on gasoline and heating oil than anticipated for fiscal 1986.

"We're going to be turning back a significant amount of money," said Cirillo.

The Department of Public Works (DPW) is expected to incur a large percentage of those savings. DPW Commissioner James L. Hickey said he expects his department to spend "in the area" of $100,000 less than budgeted for 1986.

North student arrested after assault

NEWTONVILLE — A Newton North High School student was arrested last week on charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and being a disorderly person.

Andrea Watson, 18, of Newton, was arrested at Newton North at 5:30 p.m. after allegedly beating another student with a hammer. The suspect also was charged with malicious destruction of the police department holding cell while she was being detained, police said.

Watson allegedly kicked a one-foot hole in the plaster cell wall, tore open a pillow and shoved the stuffing in the toilet, causing it to overflow and flood the floor, police said.

Watson pleaded not guilty to all charges at her arraignment in district court. She was released by Judge Monte G. Basbas on personal recognizance. The case was continued to May 20.

A police officer patroling Newton North grounds was approached by the victim, who claimed she had been attacked by another student, police said. The victim contended she had been struck two or three times in the arm with a hammer, according to police.

According to the officer, the victim had a cut on her wrist and "visible welts" on her upper arm.

The victim identified Watson as her assailant and told officers the hammer was in a bag the suspect was holding, police said.

Watson allegedly refused to allow the officer to look inside her bag, reportedly telling the officer, "Mind your own business."

While officers attempted to detain the suspect, they said she pulled away.

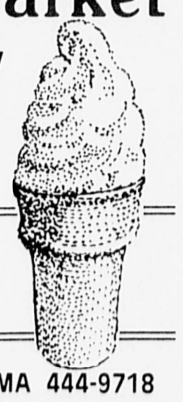

Police officers said it is unclear why the alleged altercation occurred.

Police officers forcibly removed the bag from the suspect's grip while she was at police headquarters, according to police, who said a hammer was found inside the bag.

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY
WHAT IS IN
While many traditional aspects of jewelry do not change very frequently or very often, there are some trends that are always changing. Following are a few of the latest ideas to hit the world of fashion jewelry: Extra-long chain necklaces in ribbed gold or hammered silver are "in." They may be worn dangling or in choker style. Also "in" are gold, geometrically shaped rings that are dotted with colorful precious or semi-precious stones. Women are also going to the look of large, sculptured-disc earrings set with one large stone and long, gold twists. In vogue as well are bracelets set with large, uncut stones embedded in metal mesh. Lastly, fine antique watches in gold and silver are being outfitted with jade, turquoise or lapis lazuli faces.
To be up-to-date in the jewelry world come to CAROL "THE GOLD LADY". We have pieces to satisfy the "in" crowd as well as traditional folks. We have to stay current to keep you coming back year after year. Earrings are constantly changing and we have the latest look for you. In precious metals or precious stones you'll have a hard time choosing just one pair. Shop with us at 109 Dalby St., Newton. We're here Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. 'til 9. Tel. 332-5935. The party's over; let's pay the bill

While the last marathoner's running shoes were still cooling off, the City of Newton was wrapping up the olympic task of welcoming, watching over and cleaning up after almost a million guests.

Heartbreak Hill, that part of the Boston Marathon which puts runners up against the wall more than any other part of the 26-mile race, also yielded more trash than any other part of the circuit from Hopkinton to Boston.

The costs of the cleanup, along with the costs of getting the dangerous pot holes on Commonwealth Avenue filled in time for the race and the costs of adding scores of extra police to control the crowds are huge. And we think the taxpayers of the City of Newton should not have to shoulder any part of the burden.

There are a number of parties that profit from the marathon, the organizers of which have finally looked beyond the laurels and admitted that they are, indeed, running a business. The state alone reaps huge financial rewards from the runners, fans and tourists who flock to the area for the annual classic. Boston's share of the loot has been enhanced tremendously by the recent passage of a hotel/motel tax that allows for a four percent levy on room bills.

But Newton, the city that sees nine miles of the 26-mile race run within its borders, receives a pittance from the race committee ... about half of total costs. While the flack-catchers from John Hancock talk about using revenues to fund running clinics and other events for the cities and towns along the race route, our tax dollars are still subsidizing a money-making venture.

We urge our leaders in City Hall and the Statehouse to lean on whomever they have to in the process of making sure city tax dollars go toward essential city services.

There's no arguing that the Boston Marathon is a classic in the world of sports. We're proud to be part of it. But we should not have to pay for the privilege of seeing our streets, once a year, turned into the essential physical assets of a large, profitable corporate venture.

Switzler offers much-needed counterpoint

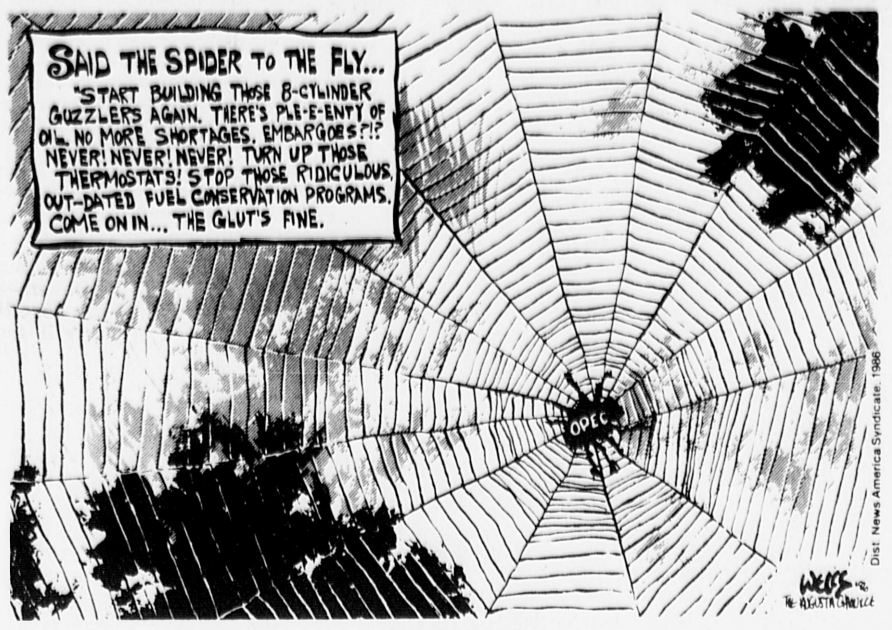

The state's voters, partisans and independents alike, should give a hosannah or two over the Republican selection of Wellesley's Royall Switzler as the endorsed candidate for governor. We can't think of anyone as capable of lighting fires under the Democrats. No matter that he isn't likely to upset the incumbent; the point is Rep. Switzler is going to make Michael Dukakis squirm when confrontation time comes.

Political satirists have been painting him as some kind of clown, posturing only for show. Channel 44's camera has him in focus over and over again, castigating the majority party's every move. He's a filibustering gadfly, bombastic, adept at using the scalpel in debate, uncompromising in philosophy. He can be outrageous, tiresome as a nonstop talker. But to dismiss the Wellesley area legislator as a clown is totally wrong.

The Republicans are fortunate to have him and fortunate, as well, to escape the embarrassment of the Hyatt candidacy, which should be quietly interred. Switzler does his homework. He knows the inside of the Statehouse, the strategy and maneuvering. He is rightly described as "the conscience of the House." In an often dull and pretty ineffective minority, he provides a necessary watchdog opposition view.

Massachusetts government desperately needs a counterpoint to the Democrats, if only to check the arrogance that goes with uninterrupted power. Legislative reform has been largely cosmetic, superficial in budget restraints. An excellent example is the resistance to any kind of meaningful spending cap. With Barbara Anderson's CLT poised to place its petition for just such a discipline on the governor and General Court, Rep. Switzler has a readymade issue to spark his campaign. He won't lack for ammunition on a whole range of subjects, in fact.

It is too much to expect Royall Switzler to restore the two-party system in our Commonwealth. Prosperity breeds acceptance of the status quo, which is the case today. There is no need for complacency, however. It is important to keep the ruling bloc on its toes. Candidate Switzler will do that very thing.

Real winners of Republican convention did not attend it

All the winners at this month's Massachusetts Republican State Convention were not there.

While there is nothing to suggest that anyone in the Democratic opposition, least of all Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, had a finger in the GOP proceedings, the Bay State chief executive may have benefited from what happened.

The wrangling within the Republican leadership, so evident at the Worcester gathering, has left that party badly split and perhaps has disillusioned many party newcomers.

At a time when the GOP, whose ranks number scarcely 13 percent of the state electorate, should be rallying its forces for a tough campaign, those who could be unifying the party seem to have their own quite-different agendas.

The failure of Gregory S. Hyatt to win the Republican nomination for governor had to be disappointing to him and his supporters, including Raymond Shamie, the party's 1982 and '84 nominee for US Senate.

It is questionable, however, whether Mr. Hyatt would be as strong a contender for the governship as State Rep. Royall H. Switzler, who bested him for the convention endorsement.

Clearly the Hyatt candidacy was not been helped by allegations that he had mishandled a 1985 signature drive for an initiative petition, a drive backed by the Associated Building Contractors.

It might be noted, however, that long before that dissatisfaction with his performance surfaced just before the convention, some GOP activists were not-so-quietly shopping for what they hoped would be a stronger candidate to challenge Governor Dukakis.

There is little doubt that the draft-Switzler movement would not have gotten off the ground, especially at the 11th hour, had more than a few prominent party members not viewed Hyatt as too hard to sell.

By George B. Merry

Some delegates may have felt that the 32-year-old North Andover attorney is too young or too inexperienced. Unlike Mr. Switzler, who has been a articulate Republican voice on Beacon Hill for more than a decade, Mr. Hyatt has never held elective office.

The Switzler-candidacy shapers included a cross section of Republican conservatives and moderates. Many of them are are state lawmakers, who are familiar with the Switzler debating skills and his knowledge of the working of state government.

Even some of his staunchest political critics concede that he does his homework. If successful in winning the GOP gubernatorial endorsement to a last-minute opponent, Hyatt may come to regret the poor-loser image he projected at the convention. If he pursues the nomination in the primary, which he seems determined to do, neither he nor his supporters can afford to attack Switzler too hard, lest in the process he weaken Republican prospects for unseating Dukakis.

Hyatt, a conservative with populist leanings, is a fomer director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, and leader of the 1979-80 initiative-petition campaign that led to voter approval of Proposition 2½. In 1984 he was was the Republican nominee for the US House in the fifth congressional district, and last fall was the in forefront of an initiative-petition drive opposing the mandatory wearing of auto seat belts.

That question will be on next Novemeber's ballot, something Hyatt had been hoping to take advantage of in a campaign against Dukakis, who sponsored the seat belt law. Switzler voted for and supported the statute, which he maintains promoted public safety.

On most other gubernatorial campaign issues there is little or no disagreement between Switzler and Hyatt. Besides Mr. Shamie, the millionire industrialist bent on reshaping the Bay State GOP along more conservative lines, the Hyatt loss dealt a setback to former Republican State Chairman Gordon Nelson, the latter's campaign manager.

Also dispappointed was Joseph D. Malone, a Shamie political lieutenant who has his sights on the party's chairmanship. His efforts failed to force a showdown on a move to oust the current GOP chieftain, State Rep. Andrew S. Natsios of Holliston.

And the Shamie-Nelson-Malone forces could hardly have been thrilled with the conventions' endorsement of Mr. Natsios for state auditor. He bested house minority leader William G. Robinson of Melrose by more than 4 to 3. The two GOP aspirants for auditor are expected to square off for the party's nomination in September.

Besides Switzler and Natsios, the convention endorsed Nicholas Nikitas, of Boston, for lieutenant governor, Deborah Cochran, of Dedham, for secretary of state, Edward F. Harrington, of Needham, for attorney general, and L. Joyce Hampers, of Weston for state treasurer.

State census should be abolished

State government in Massachusetts is often accused of spending too much money on questionable projects and engaging in duplication of effort. That situation can be partially resolved within the next two years if the legislature and, ultimately, the citizens of the commonwealth vote to abolish our state census.

Legislators will soon meet in a constitutional convention to consider just such an amendment to the Massachusetts Constitution. If they approve it this session, and again in two years, the question will be sent to the voters on a statewide referendum question in 1988. I strongly urge a favorable vote to discard this relic of our colonial past.

Massachusetts is now the only state in the nation to conduct its own census, occuring in years ending in "5", to reapportion legislative districts. All others rely on the federal census for this purpose.

The state census admittedly served a useful purpose throughout the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, when technology and methods of enumeration were not nearly as sophisticated as today. However, the federal government, through the U.S. Census Bureau, has now greatly exceeded anything we can accomplish as one individual state.

By Michael J. Connolly

In 1985, the state census cost the commonwealth approximately $6.5 million. Most of that total went to reimbursements to the local municipalities, which conduct the actual census count. With elimination of the census, this amount will be saved every ten years.

There are inherent difficulties associated in taking a decennial census. Each municipality is allowed to complete the job in the manner it seems most satisfactory, but this also results in a number of varying methods of enumeration.

It also results in delays in completing census counts. Fifteen months after the start of the 1985 census, the final totals have yet to be established. Despite the best efforts of both the census division and local census officials, administrative problems do arise. In fact, my office has had to seek action from the Attorney General against several communities which have thus far failed to report results.

None of this would occur if we relied strictly on the federal census. With a full-time administrative staff and trained enumerators, the U.S. Census Bureau has a far greater ability and the financial resources to produce a more accurate, statistically valid result.

Every other state has reached this conclusion. It is time that Massachusetts did the same, thereby eliminating needless duplication of a job already efficiently completed, as well as saving taxpayers of the commonwealth millions of dollars.

(Michael J. Connolly is Secretary of State.)

Larouche is shaking things up

The following are Great Warnings in American History.

"The British are coming! The British are coming!" (Paul Revere, 1775).

"The Russians are coming! The Russians are coming!" (Norman Jewison, 1967).

"The LaRouchians are coming! The LaRouchians!" (Democratic politicians after the March 1986 Illinois primary).

After the first warning, American revolutionaries defeated the British. After the second alarm, American movie buffs enjoyed the cold war spoof. The third distress signal hasn't congealed a national response yet. But if the history of political movements is any barometer, American voters will take a few specimen tests from Lyndon H. LaRouche before discarding his National Democratic Policy Committee on the ash heap of forgotten political causes.

In the meantime, LaRouche is proving that his NDPC bull has the power to run amok in the china shop of two-party politics.

Voters in the Illinois Democratic primary were almost casual in their blithe ability to ignore LaRouchian analysis straight out of Alice in Wonderland, solutions concocted by Dr. Strangelove and a phraseology that blends the bigotry of right-wing dinosaurs and the socialism of left-wing jackasses.

A potpourri of special interest groups seemed to be protesting a Democratic Party that had lost touch with its soul, or as Mr. Dooley lamented, "ain't on speaking' terms with itsilf."

Black voters in Chicago especially smote anybody who walked, ran or smelled antagonistic to their beloved Mayor Harold Washington.

Thus, Aurelia Pucinski, daughter of Alderman Roman Pucinski, a member of the City Council's anti-Washington bloc, was rejected by black voters in favor of LaRouchian Janice Hart for secretary of state, 74 percent to 26 percent.

How could blacks vote for a candidate whose policies spew some of the most rancid anti-Semitism to crawl out of the sewer? Unfortunately, easily.

Voters hear what they want to hear. Each special interest group listens for the code words dear to its electoral heart. This is as true for blacks as it is for farmers, National Rifle Association members, anti-abortionists, Gramm-Rudman budget-balancers, backers of Nicaraguan contras, senior citizens and homophobes.

After LaRouche's outrageous press bashing performance at the National Press Club, it's fair to speculate that he's not playing with a full deck.

Yet labeling LaRouche a "nut," a "fanatic" or an "extremist" neither defines the issues nor solves the problems.

By Chuck Stone

I'm as guilty of this as anybody, but argumentum ad hominen only lowers the level of civility in debate. John Stuart Mill put it succinctly: "The worst offense of this kind which can be committed by a polemic is to stigmatize those who hold the contrary opinion as bad and immoral men."

A USA Today editorial moaned that LaRouchians "exploit fear and prejudices." Who has become more adept at pitting races against each other than the Reagan-Meese-Reynolds troika?

LaRouchians "propose political 'solutions' that could cause chaos," continued the editorial. Reagan's policies in Central America and Libya are doing an exceptional job of sponsoring confusion.

Right now, LaRouche's movement is a sizzling media event, matching Clint Eastwood's election as mayor of Walden Pond-by-the-Sea.

But one Dallas columnist insists that LaRouche's appeal rates a "belch and a yawn." Texas Democrats are taking no chances and are issuing "LaRouche Alerts" for their May 3 primary. Republicans can hardly contain their glee.

Getting back to history, this country's political system periodically demands a political castor oil catharsis to shake it out of its two-party moribundity.

Meanwhile, Lyndon No. 2 is complying by inoculating analysts, columnists and editorial writers with a finger-waggling serum they haven't enjoyed since Richard Nixon discovered, to his dismay, that Watergate was not some sluice by the river Republican.

LWV backs housing plan for Warren reuse

Open letter to members of the Aldermanic Real Property Reuse Committee:

Massachusetts is currently experiencing a trickle-down housing crunch. The economy is booming, property values and rents are soaring, and citizens of low and moderate means are being squeezed out. There are increasing numbers of homeless families across the state and many on the low side of the economic scale cannot afford to live here in Newton anymore. Only luxury housing is being built in the city.

The League of Women Voters of Newton as well as the state League of Women Voters have long held positions advocating the community's responsibility to provide or make possible housing for those who cannot obtain it within the narrow confines of market forces. Our metropolitan area should respond to its current prosperity by helping those who are being hurt by it.

The re-use of Warren Junior High School presents the city with an opportunity to meet the needs of some of its own inhabitants. The LWV Newton is on record in support of the use of Warren for multiple housing. We believed a mixed-use housing proposal for Warren, with some market rate units, some moderate-income family units, and some subsidized family units, would provide Newton with badly needed housing stock.

Warren Junior High is located in a transitions area, with the bridge over the Massachusetts Turnpike a natural end to the West Newton commercial zone. Using Warren for any commerical or institutional use would require a change of zone and set a precedent of expansion of business up Washington Street. Multiple housing would function as an excellent buffer for the area.

Newton has spent a considerable sum of money determining that the re-use of Warren as a new main library facility is impracticable. The usual problems associated with vacant buildings–fires, vandalism–are already occurring. We hope that everyone concerned will move rapidly to allow this fine building to become an economic and social asset to our city.

Will fight to save Lower Falls post office

Open letter to owner of Lower Falls Wine Co.:

I am writing as a customer of two establishments whose fate you control: The Lower Falls Wine Company and the Lower Falls Post Office. A rumor has been circulating that you are trying to close the Post Office on order to expand the wine company. I hope this is not true.

The Lower Falls Post Office is unique, a government facility that combines uncommon efficiency with pleasant, courteous service. The loss of this fine institution–nearly one hundred years old– would be a great blow to the surrounding business communities in Wellesley and Newton. My own company, located a short distance away, makes its sales primarily via mail order, and a nearby post office is essential to our business.

Over the years, I have known quite a number of the Lower Falls postal workers. With a few exceptions, they have been unfailingly polite and helpful–and the exceptions never seem to remain on the job for more than a few days. It is, I think, the place that chooses the best workers, who must do their work in full view of the public because the office is so small. Only those willing to work hard seem to enjoy the working conditions.

There is a tradition of service so remarkable that regular customers regard the place as a kind of small miracle, like a three-star restaurant with reasonable prices and short waiting list, a place to be shared with other customers and friends, but otherwise a secret to be kept, lest the place be overrun. Such a place should not be destroyed!

As noted above, I am a regular customer of the Lower Falls Wine Company. If thanks to your efforts, the Post office is forced to move, I will take my patronage elsewhere you will no doubt be surprised to find that many of your customers feel at least as strongly as I do, and I advise you to check with them before taking further action.

Complaints over coverage given to 'cult'

To the editor:

On two recent occasions, the Newton Graphic has had two long articles about the Swedenborg School of Religion and its church. The last one was a cover story with pictures and carried over to page two.

It may be interesting to some, but because the group is listed by such authorities as Dr. Walter Martin in "The Kingdom of the Cults" (Bethany House Publishers, 1965: first printing, 33 printing, June 1982) on page 241, I personnally feel such coverage is over and beyond news coverage.

Recently, my church celebrated its 150th anniversary. Mayor Mann attended, other celebraties were there, but only a brief paragraph was printed in our paper: no photographs, no reporter, no real coverage. We ususally find our articles, if printed at all, on a back page, obscured by other events.

This is unfair and prejudicial. I'm disappointed in the Newton Graphic: a paper of Newton and all its citizens.

NTA is pushing hard for property tax break

NEWTON — Some people are still saying we cannot cut Newton's city real estate taxes. Maybe that is because they have not considered things like:

Citizens Wise —— Privatize!

Recently, Time Magazine reported that local governments in various parts of the United States have made 20 to 40 percent savings on the cost of some government services by contracting them out to more efficient private companies instead of trying to provide such services themselves. The government of England has had similar experiences.

The foregoing is a partial answer to the initial incredulousness on the part of some government people when we suggest that they could make further cuts in costs in taxes.

Our proposed tax cut would only take about half of Newton's current eight to nine million dollar excess (surplus) of city revenues over expenses. It also should be possible to initiate and continue more savings and cut real estate taxes beyond six percent in 1986. So far, there is only rationalization, scoffing, forced mirth, and inaction on a break for the Newton city taxpayer.

We are subjected to a monster menu of marvelous spendthriftery. Each expenditure has many arguments given for it but if we now had only half the present surplus, then only half of the supposed requirements would be taken care of at this time. On the other hand, if we had the minimum necessity and the same people would still try to convince you that you cannot cut city taxes.

One man's plan to control liability insurance

Fellow citizens, let's reward honesty and self-responsibility - not the greedy. Liability insurance costs are out of control due to dishonest law suits and exorbitant awards. Our legal system and our legislators are not solving the problem of skyrocketing insurance premiums. I believe the solution can be found in the free marketplace through our price system. Here's how.

I would be willing to sign a waiver of immunity against a lawsuit for any product or services I purchase. I would promise to hold no one else except myself responsible for anything which may happen to me. In return for this waiver. I would expect to be rewarded with a discount on the purchase price or service.

No one is forced to buy a product or service in the market place. With our freedom to choose should belong our responibility to use.

Moratorium supporters

This is an open letter of thanks to all the people who contributed so effectively to the successful 15-month long moratorium effort.

The 20-3 vote by the alderman in favor of the moratorium on March 17 was a real tribute to all.

We would like to salute the following organizations that were so instrumental in the communication and information process to their members and in their unrelenting support before the Board of Alderman. They are: The Newton Centre Neighborhood Association (without them, this could never have been accomplished), the Newton Neighborhood Network (who clearly manifested their strength, influence, and credibility city-wide), the Newton Highlands Neighborhood Area Council (Kay Barrett, president; Susan Mirsky, past president) for their tremendous help and support. The Auburndale Community Association (Jerry Boyce, president; Polly Bryson, former president), who encouraged and supported our effort from day one. Also the Nonantum Community Association, Alice and John Webber, co-presidents, for their perpetual support and attendance at the endless meetings over the past year and one-half. In addition, The Newton Corner Neighborhood Association, the Charles Street Neighborhood (Karen Amicangoli Rizzo), The Friends of 4 Corners (Loretta Schiavone, Regina Mandle, Howard Sholkin), Save Our Homes II (Jack Rogers), Farlow Hill Neighborhood Association (Susan Kaplan), Davis Neighborhood Association, Newton Upper Falls Advisory Committee (Brian Yates), The Newton Conservators (Anna Maria Abernathy), Temple Street Families Group (Mary Sivak), Beaconwood Road Associates and the Newtonville Neighborhood Advisory Council.

Modern passover

there were about 12,000 to 15,000 refugees."

Through "consciousness raising", lobbying, and many personal speaking engagements in this country, Gaffin helped bring the plight of the Ethiopian Jews into the limelight. Her efforts helped usher in "Operation Moses," the December, 1984, Israeli airlift of some 8,000 Ethiopian Jews out of the refugee camps and into the Holy Land they were promised so long ago.

According to Gaffin, while the ancient Jews were escaping religious persecution at the hands of the Pharoahs, most eventually made it to Israel. Some, however, became lost in the desert to wander eternally in the north African wasteland.

Gaffin theorizes that some of those lost made their way to Ethiopia, where they set up a culture that flourished in the 10th century and grew to more then one million people.

Historically, she says, the Jews were considered a "pariah" people who had "evil" powers.

"During the heyday of the Jewish community," she says, "the people were craftsmen. The non-Jews in Ethiopia were superstitious and believed that the ability to take soil and make something like pottery was evil. It wasn't like they were being associated with killing Christ or anything like that, but the Jews were still outcasts."

Because they were outsiders, the Jews of ancient Ethiopia had their own kings and queens and powerful armies. Today, however, famine, intermarriage, forced conversion by missionaries and religious persecution have reduced that once proud community to less than 8,000. Gaffin has been working for the past eight years to restore a sense of pride and dignity to those forgotten people by helping them reach Israel.

"While I was working at the World Jewery Council, I began doing some research and found out about the Jewish community in Ethiopia. I realized nobody was doing anything for them, and that's when I began to let people know what was happening. I wanted to draw attention to their plight to help get them out."

Her efforts reached their peak, Gaffin says, just after the current Marxist government in Ethiopia deposed Emperor Haile Selassie.

"The famine was very bad in the early 70s," Gaffin says. "It was one of the reasons the marxists came to power. While the Jews suffered plenty under Selassie, he thought he was a direct descendent of Solomon and Sheba and things became worse after the overthrow."

The persecution, however, was localized. Depending on where they lived, Ethiopian Jews either coped only with starvation or coped with starvation and persecution.

"Most of the Jews in the country at the time lived in Gondar," she says. "The governor there had a personal animosity against the Jews. He grew up with the traditional hostilities and suspicions against the Jews and maintained them. He was replaced a couple of years ago, but during his time in office he arrested Jews trying to escape and would go into the prison and torment them."

Although Operation Moses was successful, Gaffin is not ready to rest. Because there are still thousands of Jews left in that country and because those who are now in Israel are experiencing the problems all immigrants face, "There is still plenty of work to be done."

"Maybe it is a personal mission," she says of her involvement. "To me there were no doubts about helping them out. I knew that as soon as I learned of their suffering I couldn't go on living without doing something. There is no way I could live with myself if I didn't have the feeling that I was doing everything I could for these people who have fallen through the cracks. I hope I have made a dent."

young fighter in their charge. Clark and Paulini are veterans of the fight game with more than 100 years of experience between them. Unlike movie sterotypes of hangers on and leeches, Clark and Paulini's main concern is the kid in the ring.

"We are not training fighters to be professionals," Paulini says. "We are training amateurs. It is important that we teach these kids how to take care of themselves in the ring."

That thought is comforting to Angelo Joseph DeNucci. The trainers next thought, however, is not.

"I think this kid has a lot of natural talent," Paulini says. "He is strong, has natural moves and is in good shape. I think Joey can go a long way, maybe all the way to the 1988 Olympic Games."

Despite the enthusiasm, the elder DeNucci is hoping that this fight will be his son's last.

"I really don't want Joey's boxing career too much beyond this," he says sternly. "My son is a good athlete at Newton North. He's one of the best running backs I've ever seen and that's not just fatherly pride talking. Joey is also a very good catcher. I want him to stick with these sports and keep up with the academics. I fought in the ring so he wouldn't have to."

It is now show time. Entering the ring against a tough opponent from Cohasset, DeNucci comes back from a sluggish first two rounds to win the three-round bout by a decision over Wilson. Despite the joy felt by the entire DeNucci contingent, the dilemma will continue.

> 'I fought in the ring so he wouldn't have to.'
> Joe DeNucci, Sr.

"I've been boxing since I was about seven," Joey says. "I used to fight at my father's classes at St. Bernard's. I felt like fighting and this is my chance to see what I can do. I don't know where it is going to lead me because I was only trying to win this fight."

If he has any future as an amateur boxer, Joey says his father's influence will play a major role.

"It kind of relaxes me," he says of the fatherly advice offered by a former world class contender. "He's been there and he knows what it's all about, so he tells me things that help me in the ring."

Knowing that fathers can only exert so much control over their offspring, Angelo Joseph DeNucci nods his head.

"We will have a decision to make," he says of his son's future. "I would rather Joey not pursue boxing, mainly because I don't have the time to guide him and help him in a manner that will make me comfortable."

The scars of an abused child can stay with us all his life.

In any way you can think of, the effects of child abuse are devastating.

Over 2,000 of those abused children die.

And, for many of those who live, the effects of an abusive childhood may influence their entire lives. And ours.

Many teenage drug addicts and teenage prostitutes report being abused children. So do juvenile delinquents and adult criminals.

Because we pay to respond to those problems, we are all the victims of child abuse.

Yet child abuse can and must be prevented.

But we need your help to do it. We need money. We need more volunteers. Send us your check today, or write for our booklet.

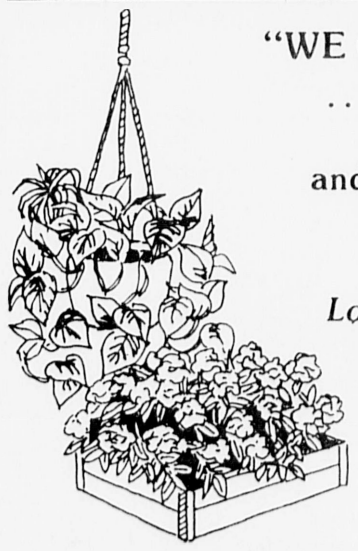

And, remember, if we don't all start somewhere, we won't get anywhere.

Aldermen urge mayor to restore budget

Problems could arise if 1986 money were spent for equipment and building improvements and Mann later decided to stick to his $45.2 million budget figure, Strand said.

The mayor then could deduct the 1986 money from the 1987 school budget, forcing cuts of other items, Strand said. If forced to make a choice, the department would cut equipment rather than teachers, he said.

Gentile voiced the same concern when Finance Chairman Paul Coletti suggested the School Department seek some of the money from this year's estimated $8 to $8.5 million in surplus cash.

"This is an area where we may try to realize some savings," Gentile said of department's $541,121 request for equipment replacement and purchase. "If we spend this money, we may regret this later on."

The department has cut 17 teachers from next year's staff, 12 fewer than it normally would under projected declining enrollment figures, Strand said.

Those 12 teachers are being held in "escrow" should they be needed to reduce unexpectedly large class sizes next year, Gentile explained.

Mann has said the department should have cut more teachers than it did. In his March 31 budget address, the mayor noted the school budget has increased 21 percent since 1982 even though enrollment has declined 20 percent during that period.

Before aldermen began their deliberations, two speakers urged the restoration of all Mann's budget cuts.

The School Committee's $46.4 million budget addresses the need for fiscal constraint while maintaining the high quality of Newton's schools, they said.

"As taxpayers, we know fully well that the reputation of the school system is a very important drawing card that makes Newton a desirable place to live and keeps the property values high," said Buzz Birnbaum, co-president of the Newton Council of Parent Teacher Associations.

"We are also concerned with what the schools deliver, with the kind of educational opportunities they provide for our children," he added.

"Declining enrollment does not necessarily call for declining resources," said Eleanor Samuels, president of the Newton North High School Parent Student Association. "You can't run a biology program if the microscopes don't work."

Shaevel first recommended aldermen restore $600,000 of Mann's cuts. Half that sum would be money the department expects to have left over from this year's budget and the remainder would come from the city's capital improvement budget, he said.

Alderman Michael Malec suggested raising Shaevel's earlier figure to $900,000. Shaevel rounded that amount off to $1 million, saying the money could come from the city's 1987 revenues, its surplus cash and the School Department leftover 1986 money.

But Programs and Planning Chairman Louis Irwin recommended the specific funding method not be named, and Shaevel amended his motion to say the money would come from "appropriate sources."

After the vote, Coletti said he would name those sources when the budget comes before the Finance Committee. He said he would urge Finance to appropriate $600,000 from next year's revenues and $400,000 from this year's surplus cash.

Irwin said he wanted to avoid naming specific funding sources so the city could give the School Department the additional money without raising its operating budget any more than necessary.

A department's operting budget acts as a base and rarely, if ever, is it decreased the next year, he said. If Mann accepted the Programs and Planning advisory resolution, he would have the option of providing the money from surplus cash or other one-time sources, Irwin said.

"I'm concerned about keeping the operating budget as low as possible," he said.

SJC voids Iodice challenge disappointed in the fact that the court decided not to address any of the substantive issues," said attorney Marshall Newman, who represented Iodice.

"Eventually, they're going to have to decide this issue — they can't keep avoiding it," Newman said. "Eventually, someone will dot all the I's and cross the T's procedurally and then they'll have to decide it. I don't know whether it will be Newton or some place else."

A Superior Court judge recently struck down a similar Boston ordinance that was being used by Mayor Raymond Flynn as a cornerstone in his policy of trying to share the economic expansion in the downtown area with the outlying neighborhoods.

Iodice sought special permits to construct apartment buildings on two parcels of land on Commonwealth Avenue in Newton. A 1977 city ordinance required him to provide 10 percent of the proposed apartment units to the Newton Housing Authority for use in its subssidized lease program for elderly persons and low-income families.

Iodice complied with the requirement after completing the buildings in January 1979 and received a lower rental rate set by the city for the units, Newman said. He filed suit a year later, saying the requirement was illegal because it resulted in the taking of his property without his consent or proper compensation.

Attorneys for the city said Iodice would never have been granted the special permits to build in a high density area without the linkage agreement.

As the case neared trial, Superior Court Judge George W. Cashman presented 10 questions of law on the isues to the state Appeals Court for guidance. The Supreme Court intervened and ruled that because Iodice's lawsuit was not filed within 20 days, as required by state law, the suit must be dismissed.

The justices declined to answer the other questions regarding the legality of the ordinance.

Newton's linkage law has led to construction of at least 81 units of low-income and elderly housing.

Dan Soyer, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Municipal Association, said he was pleased the ordinance had survived because "it's important that local governments have the flexibility to try and shape development and use their zoning laws to try and achieve some of their development objectives."

DeNucci kicks off a strong campaign for state auditor

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

WALTHAM — State Rep. Joseph DeNucci's (D-Newton/Waltham) campaign for state auditor began last week with all the subtlety of a steamroller.

Over 1,000 supporters, including dozens of high-ranking state and local officials, packed the Hillcrest Function Facility for the $25-a-plate fundraiser originally planned as part of DeNucci's re-election effort in the 10th Middlesex District.

"I wanted to use tonight to let you, my day-one supporters, know that I will absolutely be a candidate for state auditor. You know that I'm running," he told the standing-room-only crowd.

Noting that some political observers thought he was "crazy" to even consider running for the Legislature more than a decade ago, DeNucci, 46, received a roar of approval when he shouted, "We showed them didn't we."

"There are still some doubting Thomases wondering why I'm running for state auditor. Well, I guarantee you that, in the next few weeks, you'll understand why and you'll be very, very proud of your early support," he added.

DeNucci is one of four Democrats eligible for nomination at the state convention on May 16 and 17 in Springfield.

Boston City Councillors Charles Yancey and Maura Hennigan, and State Rep. Richard T. Moore of Uxbridge are also seeking the party's endorsement, but DeNucci made it clear he intends to walk away the nomination.

"I want to come out of that convention with a very strong showing. Publicly, we're going for the support of 15 percent of the delegates, but I expect something much better than 15 percent," he said.

To make that goal a reality, DeNucci has hired Joseph Newman as his convention coordinator. Newman, a major cog in John Kerry's successful campaign for the U.S. Senate in 1984, had been organizing Middlesex County District Attorney Scott Harshbarger's bid for attorney general until Harshbarger dropped out of the race earlier this week.

DeNucci said he will need to spend at least $500,000 to emerge the victor in the statewide race. He already has $30,000 budgeted for the convention.

He said he would apply the same philosophy as state auditor that has become the hallmark of his 10 years in the House.

"Making laws isn't enough. Government has to make sure the laws work for the people," the West Newton resident said. "I'm going to need your friendship first and your support second."

Barbara DeNucci said her husband went through an emotional tug-of-war before deciding to expand his political horizon.

State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane, who noted that the state auditor is the only official "with the right to look at my books," served as the master of ceremonies for the event.

Newton Mayor Theodore D. Mann, who joined Crane for an impromptu rendition of "Oh, Marie," reminded the audience that DeNucci has been responsible for 40 percent of the state budget as chairman of Human Services & Elderly Affairs for the past six years.

Waltham Mayor William F. Stanley said he is "squarely behind" DeNucci's campaign.

Harshbarger praised DeNucci's "loyalty and confidence,"

> 'You have, in Joe, a true champion for the elderly, the disabled and the common people of this state.'
> Sen. Jack Backman

"I think he knows in his heart that he's done what he could do in the Statehouse. He's at that point in his life when it's time for change, but this is not change for the sake of change," she said.

State Rep. David B. Cohen (D-Newton) said DeNucci "set the standard for the state representative from the 10th Middlesex District. Whoever succeeds him has very big shoes to fill."

State Rep. Peter G. Trombley (D-Waltham), the first public official to endorse DeNucci, called him "the people's candidate."

State Sen. Jack Backman (D-Newton/Brookline) said he spent "the best years" of his life working with DeNucci on the Joint Committee on Human Services & Elderly Affairs.

"You have, in Joe, a true champion for the elderly, the disabled and the common people of this state," he told the crowd.

while former congressman James Shannon, now in the running for attorney general, called DeNucci "a terrific candidate" who has "a great reputation in the Statehouse."

Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti also attended the fundraiser, along with boxing greats Tony DeMarco and Al "Red" Priest, Newton Democratic City Committee Chairman Peg Hannigan, Newton Board of Alderman President Michael Malec, Assistant District Attorney Peter Bella, State Rep. Susan D. Schur (D-Newton), State Rep. Albert Herren (D-Fall River) and State Rep. Carmen Buell (D-Greenfield).

Congressman Barney Frank has already endorsed DeNucci for auditor and is planning to make a nomination speech for him at the Democratic State Convention.

New logo for League

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

NEWTON — The logo commemorating the 50th anniversary of the League of Women Voters is a dazzling design of angular shapes and startling imagery.

Conceived by Joe Selame, owner of Selame Design, this high-tech pattern represents the union of the city and the League. "It's a marriage of the mark of our city during the centennial and the League of Women Voters logo which I designed in 1971," Selame says.

Selame, who has designed the packaging of many popular goods, including those for Very Fine Apple Juice and Mr. Donut, presented the logo to league members Jane Leighton, Anne Hayden and Judy Jaffe at his office recently.

Leighton, who is the chairperson of the 50th anniversary committee, says the logo is "a symbol of what we stand for as part of the city."

The League, which was founded in Newton in 1936, is searching for its earliest member to highlight the 50th anniversary celebration.

"The woman we're looking for probably joined the Newton League sometime between 1936-1946," Leighton says. She adds that the Leagues' membership books don't date back to that time. "That's why we're on a public search," she says.

The League hopes to locate its earliest member by May 10 and introduce her at the annual meeting on May 14.

"We're hoping the public can help us find her," Leighton says. "We'd like to hear from any resident whose mother belonged to the Newton League."

The League will also march in the city's Memorial Day Parade and hold a 50th anniversary party in June to further recognize the milestone.

A non-partisan organization, the League encourages citizens to vote and become actively involved in city politics. Voter registration drives and sponsored debates are among the most recognized political activities the League conducts.

"We want citizens to make knowledgeable decisions regarding city politics," said League member and public relations director Judy Jaffe. "We encourage citizens to stay involved between elections."

Stockbrokers offering discounts

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

Why are discount stockbrokers able to charge commissions that are so much lower than regular brokers? Do they cut corners in ways that may be detrimental to their clients' welfare?

L.G. Sudbury

Dear L.G.,

The lower commission fees offered by discount brokers are attractive to stockholders who prefer to make their own decisions when buying and selling stocks.

Research and investment advice to the client is the arena in which the full-service and discount brokers differ. The exclusive service provided by the discounter is the execution of security transactions, whereas the full-service broker provides research and advice in addition to other specialized services. The discounter is mainly for those investors who choose to do their own research and make their own decisions.

The full-service broker, on the other hand, provides services in addition to the execution of security transactions. They offer research services and opinions on market timing, portfolio review, the status of different industries and much more.

Discounters make up approximately 20 percent of the business in the industry. Though precise figures are difficult to obtain, both discounters and full-service brokers alike interpret these estimates as a sign that discounters are gaining public acceptance.

Donald Watson, chairman and chief executive officer of the full-service firm of Gradison & Co., Inc., of Cincinnati, doubts whether the growing popularity of discount fims is necessarily good news. He feels discounters may have to increase their level of services to combat the rapid dropping of profit margins brought about by low commission fees. If his prediction proves correct, the distinguishing feature of the discounter as an "execution-only" broker would be eliminated.

But the difference between full-service firms and discount firms is not as clear-cut as it seems. Although the popular concept of discounters holds that they don't give advice, most do.

Many discounters maintain a position somewhat in between the full-service firm and the bank broker, who is forbidden by banking law to give any advice regarding stock. The nationally-based discounters such as Schwab & Co. — though not forbidden to give advice — also try to maintain an unbiased position. Schwab now offers an information system through which a client can access different data bases to do his or her own research.

The bottom line in deciding whether to use a discounter or a full-service firm is how comfortable you are in making your own decisions.

Watershed Association relocating temporarily

NEWTON — While its headquarters at Norumbega undergoes major renovation, the Charles River Watershed Association has been given the key to complimentary office space at the Newton Marriott Hotel.

General Manager Olof Arnheim recently welcomed his CRWA neighbor guests Executive Director Rita Barron and staff Cassie Thomas and Wendy Gorin. "This is the busiest time of year for CRWA," commented Barron, "and the prospect of moving everything to alien rented quarters for two months was unnerving. The Marriott once again has shown itself a warm and generous neighbor."

The Newton Marriott is one of about 70 corporate members of CRWA, a non-profit membership organization dedicated to the health, beauty, and accessibility of the Charles River.

CRWA's official headquarters is at 2391 Commonwealth Ave. During CRWA's stay as guest of the Marriott, the CRWA address and telephone number, 527-2799, are still in effect.

NEWTON — A citizens' band radio worth $150 and a wallet containing $200 were stolen from a van Saturday night while it was parked behind the Suisse Chalet Motor Lodge on Boylston Street. Police said no damage was done to the van.

Man faces assault with weapon charge

NEWTON — A 22-year-old local man was arrested early Saturday morning on a charge of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, a concrete block, after a fight in Newton Corner.

Police said they responded to a report of a fight outside 1 Newton Place shortly after 3 a.m. They found two men wrestling on the pavement. One of them had a cut on his left arm where he allegedly was struck by the concrete block thrown by the other man.

Not guilty plea entered for setting fire

NEWTON — Rui N. Mota, 19, of Fall River pleaded not guilty at his arraignment in district court last week to a charge of burning personal property.

The defendant's bail was set at $5,000 surety or $500 cash by Judge Monte G. Basbas. The case was continued to April 18.

Mota allegedly set fire Monday afternoon to leaves piled in a truck belonging to Caruso Landscaping after a wage dispute with his boss, Luigi Caruso, police said. The wood body of the 1983 Ford dump truck was charred and the paint was damaged.

Police arrested Mota later that afternoon in Oak Hill.

Man is seen taking meat from store

NEWTON — Employees of Food Styles grocery store on Centre Street reported seeing a man leave the store with a basket of meat without paying for the merchandise last week, police said.

The suspect is described as a white male, about 30 years old, five feet, seven inches tall, weighing 140 pounds. He was last seen running along Pearl Street, according to police.

Scales stolen from Newton North lab

NEWTONVILLE — Two triple-beam scales were stolen from a science lab at Newton North High School, police said. The theft was reported last Tuesday morning.

A custodian also found dog excrement on the floor, police said.

Man tries to pass phony prescription

NEWTON — A man tried to pass a phony prescription for Percoset to a pharmacist at the Walnut Street Heartland Drug store last Wednesday afternoon, police said. The suspect dropped off the prescription, saying he would be back in 20 minutes, but he never returned.

The pharmacist telephoned Newton-Wellesley Hospital to confirm the doctor's name on the prescription, but hospital personnel said there was no doctor by that name. The suspect is described as a white male, about 20 years old, six feet tall and weighing about 180 pounds.

The pharmacist said he would contact police if the man frequents the store again.

Youth escapes after taking cases of beer

NEWTONVILLE — A male youth stole two cases of beer last Wednesday afternoon from Oakley Spa grocery store on Washington Street, but he lost one case while running from the scene, police said.

The youth reportedly jumped into a white Monte Carlo in which several other youths were waiting, according to police.

David Boyagian, the store's manager, ran after the youth and managed to wrest one of the cases from him. He tried to get the vehicle's license plate number, but a T-shirt was draped over the plate, police said.

Gunman commandeers company's van

NEWTON — A man with a gun commandeered a Shreve Crump & Low van Saturday about noon and drove away, leaving the driver on foot.

Police could not say exactly what was in the van or how much it was worth.

According to police, the van, which bore the name Shreve Crump & Low on its side, was struck from behind by a maroon car as it was turning right onto Hammond Pond Parkway from Beacon Street. The driver of the van stopped and got out to exchange papers with the other driver.

As the driver of the car approached, he pulled his jacket open to expose the butt end of a gun and simply said, "Get out of my way," according to police. He then got in the van and drove away. A passenger in the maroon car slid over into the driver's seat and followed the van as it headed toward Route 9.

The van driver walked to a service station in Newton Centre and called police. He described the gunman as being a black male in his mid-20's, about six feet, three inches tall, weighing about 250 pounds, clean-shaven with short hair.

B'nai B'rith honors Patricia Neal

Patricia Neal was honored by B'nai B'rith Women where 700 delegates from the United States, Canada, and overseas recently participated in the B'nai B'rith Women International Biennial Convention in Las Vegas, Nevada.

Academy Award winning actress Particia Neal received B'nai B'rith Women's prestigious Perlman Award for Human Advancement at a special banquet. Ms. Neal was recognized for her dedicated work on behalf of the disabled and for her support of the Patricia Neal Rehabilitation Center in her hometown of Knoxville, Tenn.

Irma Gertler of Milwaukee, Wisc., was elected president of the 120,000 member organization which unites Jewish women as a force for social advancement through education, service and action.

Resolutions passed by the convention included:

— to commend President Reagan for his efforts at the Geneva Summit on behalf of Soviet Jews, and called for continued efforts that must not be diverted by the release of Anatoly Shcharansky.

— to endorse the sanctuary movement for political refugees and call on the U.S. government to grant asylum to refugees fleeing persecution "regardless of the type of government in the home country."

— to urge the Vatican to establish diplomatic relations with the State of Israel.

B'nai B'rith Women also launched a major new program during the convention in cooperation with the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation. Titled "Genetics: Everyone Needs Education" (GENE), it is designed to educate the public about how genetics can effect their lives and their families.

Speaking at a session on Soviet Jewry, Morris Abram, Chairman of the National Conference on Soviet Jewry, told the delegates that recently-released Prisoner of Conscience Anatoly Shcharansky symbolizes not only the Jewish experience with oppression through the ages, but also the Jewish tradition of mutual support under attack. Said Abram, "He was a man who would not give in to tyranny; we held Scharansk's hand and he survived."

League seeks earliest member

NEWTON — The League of Women Voters of Newton is searching for its earliest member to share in the festivities as the League celebrates its 50th anniversary this year.

"The woman we're looking for probably joined the Newton League sometime between 1936-1946," said Jane Leighton, LWVN past president and chair of the 50th anniversary committee, "Our membership handbooks don't date back that far. That's why we're on a public search," she explained.

The League intends to locate its earliest member by May 10 and to introduce her at the League's May 14 annual meeting.

She will be invited to participate with the League in the city's Memorial Day Parade and to attend the League's 50th anniversary party in June.

The League's earliest may now be living elsewhere, but perhaps her children are still in the area. "We're hoping the public can help us find her," Leighton said. "We'd like to hear from any resident whose mother belonged to the Newton League."

To help the Newton League find its earliest member, call Jane Leighton at 527-4018 or Anita Capeless at 969-9483.

'Pirates of Penzance' opens

NEWTON — The bonds of duty have never been presented with such wacky delight as in the "Pirates of Penzance," a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta which will be presented at the Turtle Lane Playhouse April 18-May 17, at 8 p.m.

The well-known score includes such songs as "Poor Wandering One," "I Am the Pirate King," the lively patter song "I am the Very Model of a Modern Major-General," and "With Catlike Tread," otherwise remembered as "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here."

Tickets for "Pirates of Penzance" are $8-$10; group rates and senior citizen discounts are available. Parking is available and the premises are equipped for the physically disabled. For reservations and information, call 244-0169. Turtle Lane Playhouse is located at 283 Melrose St., Auburndale.

Library to display 'Shutter' photos

NEWTON — "When I walk by a subject if it's unusual or if the shadows are eye catching, I will shoot a roll of film," says Larry Wynn, whose one-man photography show "Shutter Shadows" can be seen at the Newtonville Branch of the Newton Free Library, 345 Walnut St., May 1-May 30.

Whether the viewer is looking at portraits, old and often half demolished mack trucks and automobiles or underwater objects Wynn sees while scuba diving in the tropics, the viewer senses his intensity and responds with feeling.

Wynn, who likes to photograph a small part of an object, a car door, a cracked window, a tire, "goes in as close as I can, sometimes trying to make it look like something else."

"The Bearded Captain" is a powerful portrait of Gus Kranz, one of Wynn's teachers at the Gifford School and an Outward Bound leader. Wynn, who is in his forties, met Gus, "his mentor and inspiration," who recently died, when Wynn was 12 years old.

Wynn uses a Hassleblad 2 1/4 camera, Kodak black and white tri-X film, and Agfa Paper 118 or 119. "I use the Agfa 118 paper for portraits because it has a warmer tone and brings out the skin textures," Wynn explains.

Born in Newton, Wynn lives in Hopkinton. He is a graduate of the Gifford School, attended the Orson Welles Film School and the Franklin Institute in Boston and is a member of the Photographic Resource Center, Boston.

Newtonville Library hours are Monday-Friday 9:30-6, Thursday until 9 p.m., Saturday 9:30-5 p.m. The library will be closed Monday, May 27. For more information, call 552-7162.

Charcoal drawing by Susan Schmidt called "Snowplows."

Large drawings exhibit at Gallery

NEWTON — Snowplows, milling machines, and water pumps appear in the dramatic large-scale drawings and prints that Susan Schmidt will be showing at Chapel Gallery from May 1-25. The public is invited to a reception for the artist on Sunday, May 4 from 3-6 p.m.

Susan Schmidt's oversize charcoal drawings and lithographic prints present urban forms that assume animated and mysterious qualities. Logan Airport, The Charlestown Navy Yard, factories, theatres, machine shops and power plants were all sites where the artist worked over a period of several months. The resulting drawings reveal spaces as containers of emotions. Feelings of immensity, certainty and fear are evoked through the presence and strength of the machinery and industrial forms that Schmidt has portrayed.

Chapel Gallery is located in the former Youth Chapel of The Second Church in Newton at 60 Highland St., West Newton. It is one block south of Washington Street (route 16) and three blocks east of the West Newton exit (exit 16) of the Massachusetts Turnpike extension. Admission and parking are free. Open Thursday through Sunday 1-4 p.m., in conjunction with events at the church and by appointment. For further information, please call 332-7782 or 244-4039.

Resident to exhibit paintings

NEWTON — Newtonville resident Florence M. Higgins will exhibit her paintings through April 30 at the Highlands Branch of the Newton Free Library, 20 Hartford St., Newton Highlands.

A graduate of the Massachusetts College of Art, Higgins has worked for Bachrach Photographers and is a former art teacher for the Ashland Public Schools. She has also taught children's classes for the Wellesley Arts and Crafts Association and the Newton Community Schools.

Since retiring, Higgins has pursued her interest in watercolor and oil painting. Her work has been shown at the Emerson Hospital, the Sherborn Public Library, the Mitre Corporation, the Carlisle Public Library and other locations in the Newton area.

Higgins has studied with the late Philip Parsons of Lexington, Robert Benham of Gloucester, Robert Curtis of Rockport, Thelma Joiner of Belmont, and Andrew Menna of Rockport. Currently, she is an active member of the Lexington Arts and Crafts Society.

Library hours are Monday, 1-5 and 6-8 p.m.; Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, 1-6 p.m.; Saturday, 2-5 p.m.

Time to choose a telephone company

NEWTON — Telephone customers who did not select a long distance company when the "equal access" program first was introduced in the Newton area last year will be asked again to make a choice.

Subscribers whose telephone numbers begin with 244, 527 and 964 will soon receive a ballot listing the various long distance companies serving their area.

Under a ruling of the Federal Communications Commission, those who do not complete and return the ballots to the telephone company within a specified time period will be randomly allocated to any one of the long distance companies in the area.

Cordless means convenient

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

When you wear only natural fiber clothing, a session with the iron is generally part of getting dressed in the morning.

But New Yorker Barbara Stillman has figured out how to make mornings a lot less aggravating. She acquired a cordless iron.

"It's so much easier to use and faster without the dangling cord," she says.

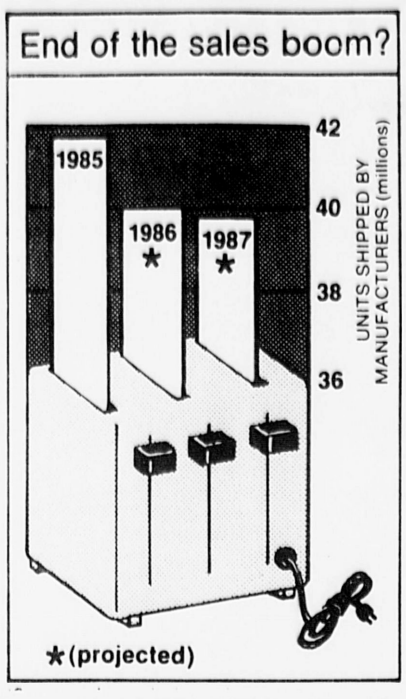

"I used to be scared stiff of carving," recalls Jules Joseph of Milwaukee. Now, his cordless electric knife has turned him into a hero at carving time.

Cordless irons, rechargeable knives, can openers and mixers in the kitchen, as well as power tools, lights and personal care appliances are putting greater convenience into many homes. Cordless appliances were hot items all over the country this past Christmas, according to the trade newspaper, Home Furnishings Daily. As a result, more companies have scheduled new cordless product introductions for the upcoming April housewares show in Chicago.

"I can see the day when cordless will be the standard for some items, such as the cordless iron and hand mixer," says Mike Miller of Hamilton Beach. The company currently markets a cordless electric knife and a cordless iron and in April will introduce a hand mixer, a can opener and a second cordless iron. West Bend Co. will be showing a new cordless product it calls the "Three-in-One."

It consists of a can opener, a mixer and a knife all on a single power base. All three hang on the wall when not in use and require only one plug. The company will also show a cordless electronic iron with an automatic shutoff.

Though today's round of products started proliferating after 1979, the technology behind them dates back to World War II, according to Wayne Smith of Sunbeam Co., which will also be bringing out new products this spring. (Cordless irons, however, employ traditional technology. Heat is generated in a plug-in base; the iron itself is engineered to heat very quickly and hold the heat longer.)

Home appliance demand hit an all-time high last year, when manufacturers shipped almost 42 million units to retailers, but slight declines are expected for 1986 and 1987. NEA graphic

The Germans developed rechargeable nickel cadmium batteries during the war and the technology entered the United States as part of war reparations, Smith added. However, little use was made of the invention at first "because we couldn't figure out what to do with it."

Experimentation began in the 1950s and a number of cordless products were introduced during the late 1960s and early '70s. Among them were cordless toothbrushes (successful) and the cordless mixer (unsuccessful), grass shears and power tools.

One reason why some products failed was that batteries were not up to the job of powering the appliances; the products were also expensive. The early failures gave nickel cadmium batteries a bad reputation which more recent products have had to overcome, said Smith.

Today's batteries are more efficient and product engineering has also improved, says Louise Retzer of Black and Decker, which markets about 14 rechargeable battery appliances.

Here are some points to consider when choosing between a cordless and corded appliance or between two different cordless brands. As a rule, the cordless product will cost more. Furthermore, since batteries will eventually have to be replaced (5 to 7 years is generally the estimated usable life) maintenance will be required for the cordless. On the positive side, these products offer considerable convenience. You will be able to take a cordless mixer to the stove or table, to pack a cordless knife for a picnic or brief camping trip.

Generally speaking, appliances with five batteries will provide more power longer than the same type of appliance with only three batteries. Compare product warranties, too; they range from one year to three years.

Choosing the right fastener for a job

By The Associated Press

In hanging items on a wall, the key is to choose the right fastener. After all, you do want it to stay put.

Which fastener you choose depends on the weight of the object to be hung and what, if anything, is behind the wall.

Better Homes and Gardens Do-it-Yourself Home Repairs book offers these tips:

With lightweight items, driving a small nail at an angle often provides enough support. For pictures and similar wall ornaments, a steel picture hanger is better.

When hanging medium and heavy weight items, try to secure them to wall studs. To locate wall studs, rap on the wall at various spots with your hand. The spaces between studs will respond with a hollow sound.

Tying into a single stud will give more than enough support for most items. However, Do-it-Yourself Home Repairs recommends that large or bulky objects such as kitchen cabinets may need to span several studs. To locate adjacent studs, measure over 16 inches. Occasionally, studs are placed on 24-inch centers. To confirm the location of studs, drive a small nail through the wall material.

If a stud is not located where you need it, reach for a hollow-wall anchor, Molly bolt, or toggle bolt. The larger the fastener, the greater its strength.

To install a hollow-wall anchor, bore a hold through the wall material large enough to accommodate the anchor's shank. Insert the anchor into the hole, tap its barbed flange into the wall and turn the bolt clockwise until tight. As the bolt is tightened, the anchor's slotted flange collapses and grips the back side of the wall material.

Toggle bolts function in much the same way as hollow-wall anchors, but they mount differently.

First, drill a hole through the wall. Make the hole big enough to accommodate the folded-up wings of the toggle. Remove the bolt from the spring-loaded wings. Slip it through a washer and then through the object to be hung. Re-attach the wings and push them through the hole in the wall. As the wings move past the back side of the drywall, they'll spring out. Then, pull out the fastener and at the same time tighten the bolt.

Computer brings designing home

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — For the potential homebuyer who cannot visualize what a house would look like from regular blueprints, a new computer program offers three-dimensional pictures with immediate feedback on suggested design changes.

The house design system was developed last year by Mark Franklin, of Glastonbury, Conn., when he was a graduate engineering student at Dartmouth College.

Under the system, with a push of a few buttons the customer can select a standard cape, saltbox or ranch, or start from scratch, and also can add a wing or subtract a window, and change the style or color of the house.

In addition, the homebuyer can view design modifications from any angle on the computer screen — from a worm's eye view under the house to a bird's eye view above — to points along a 360-degree circumference.

Franklin's computer program was described by his project adviser as "indicative of a trend we soon will be seeing — low-cost, architectural computer-aided design."

The system was created by Franklin as part of his master's thesis project. It was funded with financial support from Northern Energy Homes of Norwich, Vt., which approached the college's Thayer School of Engineering for help in utilizing computers in home design.

The construction firm said the program will help cut down on much of the time and tedium involved in developing house designs and will allow the company to be more flexible in meeting customer needs.

Greenhouse brings outdoors indoors

By The Associated Press

When it comes to expanding their homes through room additions, many people are choosing greenhouses, according to a greenhouse manufacturer and installer.

"Most of our customers are interested in changing their existing home, office or restaurant rather than building a new one," says Christoper Esposito, president of the Four Seasons Greenhouse franchise network, based in Farmingdale, N.Y. "The greenhouse structure is most popular because we are selling the feel of outdoor living and bringing it indoors."

Four Season Greenhouses offers customers prefabricated kits for do-it-yourself installation and partial or complete dealer installation.

Its design uses a built-in shading system and special glass that reflects heat, but not light, away in summer and reflects heat back inside in winter, while remaining visibly clear.

Other features include a weather-tight cooling system and tempered curved glass.

A typical 10-feet-by-16-feet greenhouse addition costs $10,000 to $15,000, fully installed, says Esposito.

Among his customers, he says, are celebrities Tom Seaver and Jane Fonda, and commercial companies including Kentucky Fried Chicken and Hyatt Hotels.

Remodel kitchen as you do spring cleaning

By The Associated Press

With the coming of spring, it might be a good idea to get a head start on seasonal home improvements by redecorating what many consider the most important room of the house — the kitchen.

Industry experts have estimated that 3.5 million American kitchens will be remodeled during 1985, explaining that many homeowners view the remodeling of their current residence as a viable alternative to the purchase of a new one.

There also is a feeling that a new or remodeled kitchen increases the value of a home while at the same time providing immediate enjoyment.

Because the kitchen usually is the busiest room in the house, remodeling should be aimed at creating a new kitchen that's not only attractive and easy to clean but also functional.

Depending on budget considerations, there are several decorating options. These include applying a fresh coat of paint or new wallpaper and perhaps floor tiles to complement the new color scheme.

Simply by changing the color or style of your curtains, some consultants advise, you can give your kitchen a whole new feeling. Or, you may want to consider a lightweight fabric and color when choosing new curtains to give the kitchen a fresh, airy look for spring.

Another suggestion, if you have a dinette set, is to complete your design ideas with a tablecloth or placemats that complement or contrast your curtain colors.

However, the experts caution, if your kitchen cabinets are in poor condition, out of style or not functional, then other changes in decor will be fruitless.

Many decorators suggest your kitchen cabinets should be the focal point of your renovation, since they dominate the room.

Consumers remodel their kitchens to achieve more counterspace and cabinet storage space, to improve the layout so the room functions better, to have more up-to-date cabinets and to increase the value of the home, according to a 1984 survey by a trade journal, Kitchen and Bath Business.

Rather than installing new cabinets, which can be an expensive, messy and time-consuming process, you can give your kitchen a new look by simply refacing your cabinets.

There are more than 150 door designs and 200 finishes and colors — including woodgrain finishes — to choose from. This allows you to custom design a new look for your kitchen, and it usually costs about half the price of installing new cabinets. The refinishing process takes only about two days to complete.

After refacing your kitchen cabinets, you may want to turn your attention to other ways to make your kitchen more spacious and functional.

Small appliances, if placed at one end of the kitchen counter or attached to the bottom of upper cabinets can create even more counter space.

Interior cabinet aides such as pull-out garbage pails, lazy susans, towel bars and built-in cookware racks further organize the kitchen. Hanging plants from the ceiling corner and placing fruit baskets or flowers on the windowsill is yet another another way to have beauty without clutter.

1950s furnishings seeing a resurgence

By Better Homes and Gardens

Once rummage sales staples, those boomerang tables, starburst chandeliers, chairs nicknamed the Ant and the Egg, and a host of other 1950s-era furnishings are proving that style means staying power in today's market, says Better Homes and Gardens Decorating magazine.

No longer considered just a fad, mid-century furnishings have enjoyed a resurgence in popularity in the past few years, a revival fueled not only by cachet and sometimes necessity, but also by the good design, sculptural beauty, and spare but sturdy construction of pieces long relegated to forgotten attics and basements.

Years short of the antique status that has boosted the price of Victoriana, art deco, and art nouveau pieces, many 1950-style furnishings, even those of noted designers, remain available, affordable, and compatible with contemporary interiors.

For example, in New York, a five-piece setting of Russel Wright dinnerware can be found for about $25, and Venini handkerchief vases sell for $200 and up. At Fifty-50, a Manhattan shop that has one of the most extensive collections of designer pieces, Charles Eames' simple birch lounge chair in fine condition carries a $550 tag, up from $250 to $350 three or four years ago. But prices are still reasonable for what some designers believe are tomorrow's valuable antiques.

"There must be thousands of attics, basements, and storerooms full of this merchandise," says Michael Cuttie, Chicago designer and vice president of Janet Schirn Interiors of Chicago and New York. Prices on 50 pieces have stabilized, he says, but it may be temporary. "Popularity will probably blossom," he says. "There's still the stigma of bad design and having what your parents had."

Some of the classic '50 pieces are, of course, out of production. So, depending on rarity and vintage, some items carry substantial prices. Sculptor Ismu Noguchi's amoeba coffee table, created in 1944, is perhaps one of the era's most famous pieces. Herman Miller Co. recently reissued a version of it with black or walnut legs for $995. The original, with birch legs and now out of production, fetched $3,000 at one Manhattan shop.

The toasts of postwar era furnishings are those by such noted designers as Eames, Noguchi, Eero Saarinen, and Arne Jackobsen. Freed at last from miltary responsibilies, furniture designers returned to their craft, often applying military technology to their new creations. Eames, for example, developed a bent-plywood chair that was inspired by a laminated leg splint he designed for the Department of the Navy during the war.

Peace brought a sense of starting anew, reflected in the spare, clean-looking, and sculptural designs. Plastics, plywood, tubular steel, and aluminum proved new technology compatible with good design. With war-torn Europe preoccupied with rebuilding, American designers basked in the spotlight.

"It was the first time that American design could be far away the best," says Ralph Cutler, co-owner of Fifty-50.

The Miller company in Zeeland, Mich., had perhaps the greatest impact on postwar contemporary design and employed George Nelson, Noguchi, Eames, and Eames' wife, Ray.

Another important furniture company was Knoll International with noted architect-designer Saarinen, who offered his curing Tulip table and chair in 1956.

Danish designer Jacobsen was master of the biomorphic chair. To it, he added humor to produce the classic the Egg and the Ant, both of molded plastic.

In the early 1960s, the two leaders — Miller and Knoll — moved on to the more profitable arena of commercial design.

"So what had been a residential look became a corporate look," Cutler explains.

In "Mid-Century Modern" (Harmony Books), author Cara Greenberg says cheap imitations flourished because designers were not permitted to patent original designs. Poor reproductions of '50 furniture tarnished the appeal of the originals.

Dealers of '50 furniture advise that knowing how advancing technology changed, even slightly, the shape of pieces or materials used can help a consumer determine vintage.

Home warranty protection can put lid on service costs

By The Associated Press

Since home warranty protection was introduced in the early 1970s, it has become more and more popular among homeowners, according to Lynn J. Brinker, president of American Home Shield, of Dublin, Calif.

Brinker says home warranty protection plans provide an inexpensive way to put a lid on costs associated with service or replacement of major appliances and home systems.

The policy is a comprehensive service and replacement contract covering breakdowns due to normal wear and tear. This can include heating and electrical systems, built-in appliances, central air conditioning and swimming pools.

Brinker says American Home Shield's computerized system sends a local subcontractor to the policy holder's house and repairs are generally completed within 48 hours.

Bats awaken for Lion softballers

Some days you have it, some days you don't.

The Newton South girl softballers had it Friday, breaking loose from the shadow of a recent batting slump to knock out 20 hits in a 19-6 pasting of visiting Wayland.

"All week the bats were quiet," South coach Larry Caranfa said, "but things were just going our way on Friday. It was the type of day where we could have scored 30 runs."

Dede Theodore led the Lion charge with a pair of two-run homers, one in the second and one in the fifth. Jen Lerman and Laura Baumberg had perfect days, both batting four-for-four.

Maria Crovo cracked three hits in four trips while Katrina Antonellis had two hits in four at bats for South.

With a 17-0 lead after just four innings, Caranfa called the Lions off.

"We did not rub this in," he said. "We stopped stealing in the third inning."

Newton South is 4-3 overall and 2-3 in the Dual County League.

Tigers edged

A run pushed across with only one hit in the fifth inning provided the difference as host Arlington defeated Newton North, 3-2.

With a runner on first and one out, Andrea Salipante got the only hit of the inning to put runners at the corners. Rhonda Siggens then put down a bunt and when the Tigers misplayed it, the run scored.

The Spy Ponders had tied the game on a two-run double by Jeanne Munsey in the fourth.

The Tigers scored single runs in the first and second to take the lead. In the first, Marie Farrar rapped a one-out single, went to second on Sharon Silva's hit, then stole third and continued home when the throw went into left.

Another Arlington miscue helped Newton go up by two in the second. Two walks sandwiched around a Jen Heesch single loaded the bases, and winning pitcher Judy Reid promptly threw a wild pitch to plate a run.

Silva was the only Tiger to garner two hits.

UMaine's Colin Ryan

Bright future for Ryan as catcher at UMaine

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — University of Maine-Orono baseball coach John Winkin is resting easier these days thanks to former Newton North catcher Colin Ryan.

According to the Bangor Daily News in Bangor, Me., the freshman Ryan has not only secured the role of backup catcher that was such a concern weeks ago, but the former Suburban League all-star should see quite a bit of playing time.

The 6-1, 170-pound Ryan beat out fellow freshman Jim MacMichael recently to fill one of the major holes in this UMaine group — second fiddle to senior catcher Bill Reynolds.

"(Colin) fills a very important role for us right now," Winkin told the Bangor Daily News recently. "He's in a position to be very helpful in the catching department as needed."

With Reynolds having a history of injuries and inconsistancy behind the plate, Ryan, highly touted for his rocket throwing arm, could play a major role in Maine's success.

He batted .296 with eight hits in 27 plate appearances during UMaine's recently-completed spring journey through Florida. Ryan has hit for three extra-basehits, including a home run, and has driven in four men in addition to scoring six runs.

Behind the plate, Ryan recently gunned down three base-stealers in a 9-3 loss to the University of Miami.

UMaine assistant coach Bob Whalen said Ryan could be the best throwing catcher UMaine has had in a while, adding that Ryan "has quick hands and an exceptionally strong arm."

While Winkin said that he is pleased with Ryan's progress since the fall workouts, he said that there is still room for improvement. Ryan is raw, but Winkin said hard work will cure that.

"He has good athletic abilty, but isn't disciplined enough yet to master the skills," the coach said. "The only way to aquire that is by playing and working at it."

One of Ryan's weaknesses is at the plate. He has struck out 11 times in 27 at bats, and Winkin said Ryan must learn to "master the strike zone." Winkin added, however, that Ryan has the potential to be "a pretty good hitter."

Ryan nailed 16 baserunners over the summer and batted a team-high .375 with 13 RBIs, second on the Post 440.

Letterwinner

Julie Wilgoren, a sophomore at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., and a resident of Newton, earned her first varsity letter in squash. Playing at the number four through seven spots on the ladder, she compiled a 2-10 record. The daughter of Richard and Gale Wilgoren of 74 Greenlawn Ave., Julie is a 1984 graduate of Newton North High School where she lettered in soccer and softball.

St. Germain goal ignites Tigers in second half, 7-4

NEWTON — It's a team game, but sometimes a solo performance is needed to kick-start a sluggish group. That's what it took on Friday as Dave St. Germain took matters into his own hands to ignite a second-half rally that gave Newton North a 7-4 lacrosse victory over Winchester.

The Sachems were up, 4-2, at halftime. Josh Carpenter owned both Newton goals, assisted by Mark Adams.

The second half didn't appear to be too much different for the first five minutes, until St. Germain saw an opening from his defensive post and took it on the attack himself.

He picked up the ball at midfield and went all the way in for a shot on goal. That bid was stopped, but he picked up his own rebound and fired it in.

That seemed to fire the Tigers up, as John Flynn scored on a fast-break goal from Carpenter four minutes later to tie the game at 4-4.

The final period was all Newton. Dave Robinson scored the winner (on the break) and the insurance goal (from Adams) to ensure the Tiger win.

Coach Rick Clark is still extremely happy with the defense, but is concerned at the other end.

"We're still not shooting well," he said. "We're not really stepping in and taking the good shot. That was frustrating. We're inconsistent."

On defense, Scott Lanciloti and Dave Redmond joined St. Germain in a good effort. Lanciloti had 11 takeaways.

"He's playing outstanding lacrosse," said the coach.

Matt Keegan made nine saves in the second half to shut out the Sachems.

Maroons rout North

A struggling Newton North squad again had goal-scoring difficulties and a high-flying Weymouth North team clipped the visiting Tigers, 6-3, in a rematch of last season's league championship.

The Tigers had the final laugh last May when they knocked off Weymouth for the Division I title, but coach Rick Clark was anything but cheery after Tuesday's defeat.

"We can't put the ball in the ocean," Clark said. "For one, we don't run the offense, and two, we don't run the man-up. We're not making good adjustments and we're shooting poorly."

The Tigers drew first blood, getting quick goals from Josh Carpenter and Mark Adams for a 2-0 lead, but it was an edge that wouldn't last long. Weymouth North chipped away, and on two goals by Jamie Jackson and one by Steve Marsh, the Maroons were in business with a 3-2 lead.

The score stood into the third frame, and despite what Clark called "a tone of shots" by the Tigers, Weymouth North came out with the period's only goal.

"Right now, we are not a good offensive team," Clark said. "A lot of veterans are not pulling their load."

Six minutes into the final frame, Weymouth North struck again, this time on a shot that deflected in off a Newton stick. Clark said that was the killer.

"It took the wind out of us," he said.

The Maroons scored once more before Otto Mariano fed Josh Carpenter for a Newton North man-up goal with a minute and a half remaining.

Clark praised the defense of Scott Lanciloti, Doug Proia, and Dave St. Germain. Lanciloti shut down Weymouth North's top gun, Mark Donovan, holding the high scorer to just one assist.

"He was all over him," Clark said of Lanciloti. "Scott took the ball away all day."

Late rally saves win for Lancers

CAMBRIDGE — Insurance, whether it be auto or life, is a good idea. For Don Dabenigno, the rule also applies in baseball.

Dabenigno's Newton Catholic Lancers invested in some seventh-inning insurance Saturday, adding two runs to a one-run lead, and it proved the difference in a 5-3 victory over host North Cambridge Catholic.

Leading 3-2 in the seventh, the visiting Lancers got bonus RBI-singles from Jeff Sherman and Frank Battista, and the cushion scores proved to be more valuable when North Cambridge plated what would have been the tying run in the bottom half.

Brian Cullen had singled with two outs in the Lancer seventh and, after stealing second, raced home on a Sherman basehit. Sherman took second on a play at the plate, then Battista grabbed a bat and scored him.

In the first inning, Sherman singled home Nick Abruzzi and, from second base, he stole third and scored on an overthrow.

John Canning pitched four innings for the win and Battista finished up. Sherman's three RBI were a plus, as were Abruzzi's three stolen bases. John Taylor chipped in with three Lancer hits.

Frosh deliver for North nine

A couple of freshmen came through big for Newton North, but it was senior Dave LeConti who had the deciding blow, a two-run homer in the seventh that gave the Tigers a 6-4 win over Somerville.

The freshmen put North in a position to win the game with their performances. Steve Leonard, coming off a rough outing against Walpole, looked like he was in for more of the same when he gave up three runs in the first inning on Friday. Somerville racked him for three doubles and a single, in addition to a couple of walks.

A good play on a squeeze bunt got Leonard out of a jam and seemed to fire up him and the team. After that frame, the righty allowed only two hits and one run the rest of the way.

"It was a very encouraging effort," said North coach Dick Walker.

The Tigers began battling back in the third, thanks to another frosh. After a leadoff single by Ed O'Brien, George Maxcey drilled a two-run homer over the fence in left.

Somerville made it 4-2 in the fourth, but Ron Coppola closed the gap to one again when he tripled and scored on a ground ball in the sixth.

Down by one going into the seventh, Maxcey came through again for Newton with a double to get things going. When Aldo Calcagni's fly ball went off the center fielder's glove, pinch-runner Mike DeGeorge came around to score to tie the game.

Calcagni went to second, and he had little trouble coming home with the gamewinner when LeConti drilled a shot on one-hop that zipped past the right fielder and into open territory for a home run.

Coppola helped preserve the win in the bottom of the seventh with an excellent diving catch in center with a runner on second.

"There were so many good things in that game," Walker praised, noting the defense and mental toughness of the players.

The summary:

NEWTON NORTH(6)-Maxcey 4-2, Calcagni 2-1, LeConti 4-1, Coppola 3-2, Lyons 4-0, Giddon 4-1, Galanis 4-2, Scales 4-0, O'Brien 3-1. Tot. 32-10.

DeNucci, Cuccinello, post ring victories

Frank "The Hit Man" Cuccinello and Joe DeNucci both came away winners recently at the Newton Boys' Club, boxing there way to unanimous decisions.

Cuccinello, a 128-pound 15-year older from Waltham, upped his record to 35-2-6 with a decision over Kevin Gaudet of Natick in the main bout.

Gardiner hurls Beaver victory over Billerica

Brian Gardiner struck out eight and Steve Silverman drove in two runs to lead Beaver Country Day to a 5-3 victory over visiting Billerica Academy of Maine Friday.

John Fields of Newton singled to start off Beaver's three-run fifth innings. West Newton's Chris Spagnuolo followed with a walk, and after a successful double steal, Silverman plated both with a single. Freshman David Karofski of Weston then scored Silverman with a single.

Gardiner pitched the distance for the win despite walking 11. The Dedham resident pitched out of several jams despite the contol problems.

Beaver, 3-0, will host Westbridge on Wednesday at 3:30 p.m.

DCL basketball all-stars

Stewart, Collins, Thirumalaisamy represent South

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

The two area teams came out remarkably well when the Dual County League coaches sat down to choose their All-Stars recently. Newton South and Weston accounted for nearly half of the team, boasting five of the 12 selections. The Lions had three players chosen, with Weston adding two.

League champion Lincoln-Sudbury was the only other team with three players picked, led by Most Valuable Player Waymon Smith. South's Reggie Stewart was the runner-up in the MVP balloting, despite being a junior.

Joining Stewart on the elite squad were teammates Pillan Thirumalaisamy and Randy Collins. Weston was represented by Darryl Akins and Tom Callahan.

Lincoln-Sudbury's other picks included Joe Sims and Jim Devaney.

Wayland had a pair of players chose, Eric Thelin and Craig Doherty.

Rounding out the team were Concord-Carlisle's John Mee and Boston Latin's Joe King.

Smith is not the prototype MVP. He averged only 13 points a game, but anyone who watched the DCL champs this season knows that number tells only a small part of the story.

Smith was the guy the Warriors went to in the clutch. For instance, in a tight game against Newton South, he scored nine points in the last four minutes of the game to seal the win. It was those types of performances that convinced the league's coaches to single him out. The 6-1 senior guard was a physically domineering type of player.

The area stars:

Pillan Thirumalaisamy — Newton South featured a balanced scoring attack this season, but Thirumalaisamy was as key a player as the Lions had. He averaged 14 points a game, and wasn't afraid to get his hands dirty playing defense.

In addition, the senior led the club in assists with 74 despite being nominally the "off" guard. Thirumalaisamy was extremely careful with the ball when he had it, turning it over only 37 times in 80 quarters of play.

"He's a solid all-around player," said Coach Joe Killilea of the two-year starter.

Thirumalaisamy, who is a three-sport captain as a senior (soccer, basketball, baseball), has several options open to him when it comes to college. He's already been accepted to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which would love to see him on the hardwood next season. He hasn't committed himself to anyone yet though, as he's still waiting to hear from Harvard and Yale.

Reggie Stewart — This junior was a surprise to Killilea this season. He could hardly have been otherwise, coming as a transfer from New Haven, Conn. It didn't take long for him to establish himself, as evidenced by the second-place finish in the MVP voting.

"He's a kid who can do a lot of things well," said the coach, and the numbers back it up.

Stewart led the Lions with 99 rebounds this year, and averaged 13 points a game. But he also contributed in many ways not normallyi expected of a center. He had 41 assists, 45 steals and 32 blocked shots, all of which illustrate what a broad range of talents he has.

"He has the capability to explode," Killilea said. He referred to the Weymouth South game in the tournament as an example, when Stewart scored 14 points in the second half to take over as the Lions triumphed.

Randy Collins — South's other junior All-Star, Collins was called "the second best point guard I've ever had" by his coach. Ranking number two to Meatchie Russell with year left in your high school career is quite a tribute.

Collins averaged 14 points a game in Newton's balanced attack, and handed out 70 assists. He added 62 steals, playing the kind of defense Killilea was looking for when the season started.

"He has real good court sense," the coach said. "He's an excellent passer. He has the potential to be a real fine ballplayer next year."

At 5-11, Collins can almost get over the rim, and probably will next winter. He can penetrate or shoot from outside, and had a high of 27 points this season against Boston English.

The All-Star list:

MVP-Waymon Smith, Lincoln-Sudbury.
Newton South-Reggie Stewart, Pillan Thirumalaisamy, Randy Collins.
Weston-Tom Callahan, Darryl Akins.
Lincoln-Sudbury-Smith, Joe Sims, Jim Devaney.
Wayland-Eric Thelin, Craig Doherty.
Concord-Carlisle-John Mee.
Boston Latin-Joe King.

Triple by Pappas keys South comeback in 7th

CONCORD — Chris Pappas tripled in a run and then scored on a Tom McGary squeeze in the seventh inning to lift Newton South to a 5-4 Dual County League victory over host Concord-Carlisle on Friday.

The Lions were down a run going into the final frame, which Mark Maiocca opened with a single. Pappas followed by slammed a shot to deep left-center, which tied the game and left him standing on third. After a strikeout (the 13th by Concord pitching in the game) McGary bunted down the first-base line. As the ball was misplayed, Pappas came storming home.

South's runs came in bunches, as the other three were all scored in the first. Pillan Thirumalaisamy ignited the rally with a one-out double. Maiocca reached on an error, and both runners moved up on a wild pitch. After another out, Ben Burlingame walked. Thirumalaisamy came home on a wild pickoff attempt before McGary loaded the bases again. John Doherty then came through with a clutch single to chase home a pair of runs.

John Cappadona picked up the win for the 3-0 Lions with a route-going effort. He walked three and struck out three.

The summary:

NEWTON SOUTH(5)-Monbouquette 3-0, Thirumalaisamy 4-2, Maiocca 4-1, Pappas 3-1, Burlingame 3-0, McGary 3-2, Doherty 3-1, Cappadona 4-0, O'Tooie 3-0. Tot. 30-7.
CONCORD-CARLISLE(4)-Tobin 4-1, Davidson 4-1, McKennitt 3-1, Frunche 1-1, Colleran 4-1, Cleary 3-0, Shaeffer 2-1, Gearty 3-1, Hattar 1-1, Loynd 3-0. Tot. 28-8.

Lions girls bow to Brookline in lacrosse

Brookline scored eight straight second-half goals to flip the momentum in a 15-10 come-from-behind victory over host Newton South on Thursday.

The Lions led at the half, 8-5, but Brookline would strike back every few minutes to defeat the Newton South defense.

"We ran out of steam," admitted South coach Gwen Smith. "Brookline got the momentum going and there was just no stopping them."

Senior goaltender Liesl Jones stopped 21 shots.

Newton Midgets showed class in National tourney

NEWTON — Though they came back losers in the three games they played, anyone who came in contact with the Newton Midget A team during the national tournament in Marquette, Mich. would strongly disagree with that label.

In fact, according to Coach Neil Schwartz, two incidents pointed out just what the people of the area thought of his players.

"The people at the Holiday Inn (where the teams stayed) told us that we were the best-behaved group there," the coach said, "And the tournament people called us the team they'd most like to have back."

Schwartz had equally kind words for the organizers of the tournament: "The treatment from the Marquette people was superb. The tournament was extremely well-run."

On the nice, Newton found itself in a little over its head against some of the teams in the tournament. There are no national rules on how teams are selected, so a state or regional all-star team can be matched up against a team from one town, as was the case often for Newton.

The local club knew it would be in for a time of it from the beginning, when they watched their first-round foe, Rolling Meadows, Ill., practice on Thursday. There they found out Rolling Meadows had already played 70 games, and featured players from six cities around Chicago. By comparison, Newton played 26 games all season. In addition, the Midget A team was the second club picked from the city. The AA squad had most of the top players.

Still, the Midgets played what Schwartz called "a superb game," in losing a 6-2 decision. The score was only 2-0 after two periods, with Newton holding a 26-19 edge in shots. Neil Ronchinsky made some great saves in the net to keep Newton in the game.

Twenty-two seconds into the third period, Bill MacDougall made it 2-1 when he scored on a 10-foot wrist shot. Dom Bianchi and Jim Rizza assisted on the power-play goal.

That must have fired up Rolling Meadows, who scored the next four goals, pouring 25 shots on Ronchinsky in the third period alone.

Sid Queler scored Newton's final goal, off a two-on-one break with Rob Ingham.

The Midgets then stuck around Lakeview Arena, home of Northern Michigan, to watch their next opponent, Royal Oak, Mich., hammer Berlin, N.H., 10-3.

Royal Oak was another regional-type team, which had already played 96 games. In addition, due to the differences in rules in different states, they carried 18 skaters and two goalies, while Newton had 12 and two.

The Royal Oak squad featured players from 10 different towns around Detroit, and 12 of those players have already earned full hockey scholarships to college. The program is so well-known in the Detroit area that Pat Lafontaine traveled more than an hour each way to play for the team before he went on to the U.S. Olympic squad and the New York Islanders. The team has no less than five paid coaches.

The final score showed the difference in the programs, as Royal Oak, which eventually won the title, took a 9-0 win.

By the end of two periods, Newton was without Dave LeConti (ribs), Bianchi (knee), Rizza (arm) and Chris Pike (leg), due to a variety of injuries. Newton went into the third period down, 5-0, and down to eight healthy skaters.

"Our kids were exhausted," said the coach.

Four hours after that, the Midgets were up against a team more on their level, but came out on the short end of an 8-4 decision to Berlin, N.H. Again numbers played a big part.

Two of the four injured players from the first game were able to come back for this one, albeit at less than 100 percent. That still left Newton starting the game with only 10 skaters.

This one was tied late in the second, as Newton fought back from behind three times.

MacDougall tied it the first time, taking a pass from Peter Martin on the left wing, deking the goalie and firing a shot into the short side.

After Berlin scored, MacDougall went to the well again from Queler and Eric Marder. Schwartz noted that Marder had an outstanding series, filling in wherever he was needed.

Once again Berlin went ahead, and once again Newton tied it. This time Queler did the honors, firing a 12-footer under the crossbar from Ingham.

With 40 seconds left in the second, the physical game erupted into a "brawl," as Schwartz put it, with three players ejected from each team. That left Newton with seven skaters and Berlin 13 for the final period.

That finished Newton off, as Berlin scored 12 seconds after the fight and added four more in the third period.

Throngs party at Heartbreak

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — It is a little before 8 a.m. on this windy, steel-grey morning that promises rain. It is still hours before thousands will line the sloping section of Commonwealth Avenue, but a few early risers prepare for the festivities to come.

Just past the crest, Bob Parshley and his eight-year old son Richard set up a grill, table and chairs in anticipation of hosting their first Marathon-day party on Heartbreak Hill.

"Last year, we saw the race on Beacon Street," he said. "This is our first year in Newton and I am really excited about being here."

"Here" is a brick house at 194 Commonwealth Avenue that Parshely moved into last summer. A sales manager for Digital, Parshley and his family moved to Newton from Rochester, New York.

"My ideal home was always a four-bedroom colonial on Commonwealth Avenue," he said. "With the marathon and all, it is a dream come true to be here."

All is quiet in this up-scale neighborhood. Except for a WBZ-TV camera crew and a few police officers, it is just another nasty New England April morning. It would not be that way for long.

"I really don't know what to expect," Parshley says after learning that police expect upwards of one million spectators in the Garden City alone. "I know that I told about 40 or 50 of my friends to stop by, but I don't know what will happen with all the people lining the streets."

While it was the first marathon for the Parshleys, Dr. Robert Kirschbaum, up in a tree with a handful of multi-colored balloons, was getting ready for his 30th.

"My wife got these for her birthday," Kirschbaum offers as reason for being in the tree. "We figured it would be a nice idea to tie them up here for everyone to see. This is a great time for us, with the race and all. We always have people over to see it."

Further down Commonwealth, towards Boston College, a lone hotdog vendor sets up shop. Despite having a captive audience, the vendor, who wished to remain anonymous, insists he will not make a killing on the day.

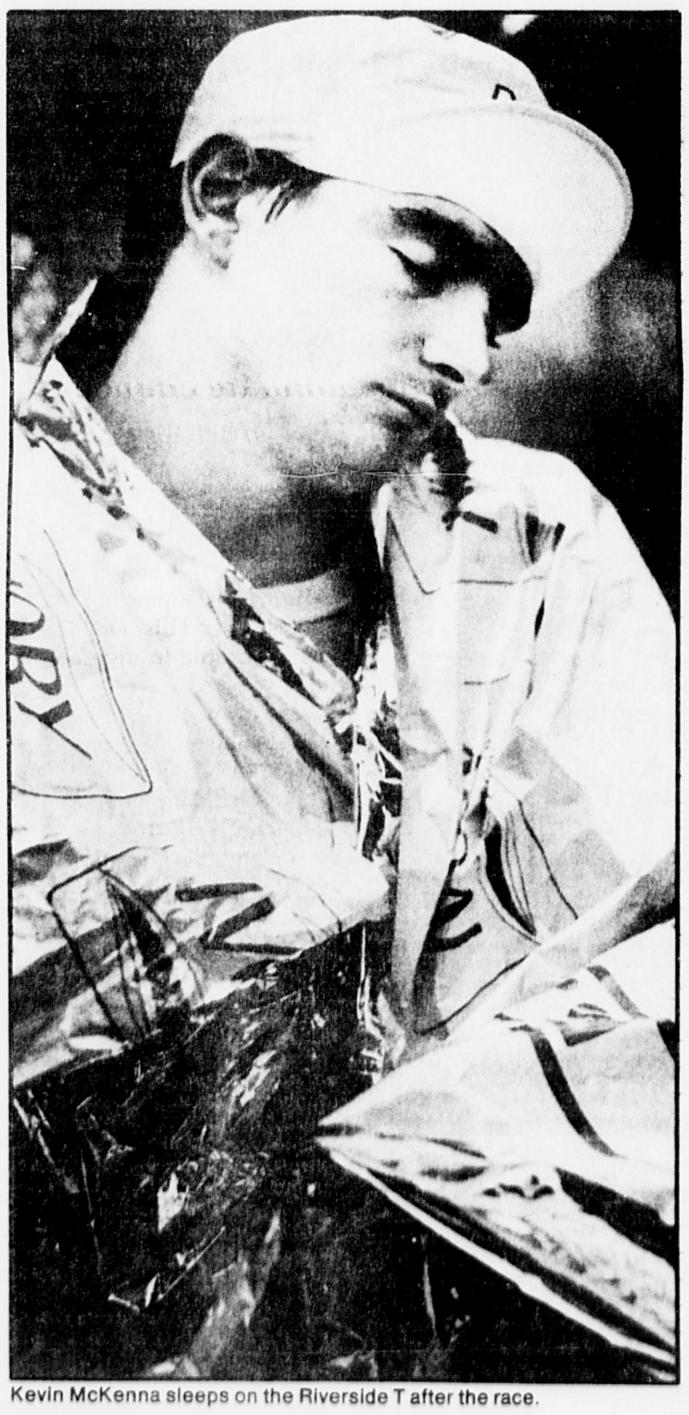

"I've been here six or seven years," he says, opening up packages of chicken franks. "It gets really hectic. Everyone thinks the prices are so high and that I'll make $1,000, but I'm lucky if I make half of that."

It is now 8:30 a.m. and the first of what will be a massive invasion of spectators establish a beachhead on the corner of Hammond Street and Commonwealth Avenue, the pinnacle of the hill. Wallace and Anne Molanari of Worcester have come to this spot because "this is where it all happens."

"We were out dancing till 3 a.m," Wallace Molanari says with a laugh. "As long as we were up, we decided to drive here. We didn't know we'd be the first here, but hey, that's great. Heartbreak Hill is the most exciting part of the race because this is where the runners really have to strain. Races are made and broken here."

The Molanaris, who describe themselves as being in "the late 60s," set up camp on a park bench and tell stories of the glory years of Boston sports. Calling themselves "the oldest teenagers in the world," Wallace and Anne marvel at the section of roadway so often taken for granted by those who live here.

"This is such a famous hill," Anne says. "It's amazing to think that people actually have homes on it."

'Best crowd in years'

NEWTON — Monday's crowd of marathon viewers was "probably the best crowd in years," according to a Newton Police spokesman.

There were no arrests made by police Monday in the Garden City. Police spokesman Lt. James O'Donnell said, "It was a good crowd. They came out to see the runners... There was no wholesale drinking."

O'Donnell said there were approximately 80 Newton police officers working the marathon, along with about 100 National Guardsmen and a complement of State and Metropolitan Police.

The cool weather and intermittent rain may have kept some of the revelers home, but it also may have helped Australian Rob de Castella, who ran a Boston course record time.

By 4 p.m. much of Commonwealth Avenue in Newton was open to traffic and many of the spectators were headed home, according to O'Donnell, adding, "The rain came just at the right time."

Pint-sized hawkers flock to the Hill

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Like any major event attracting thousands of people, the Boston Marathon is a red-letter day for hawkers, peddlers and other entrepreneurs who sell everything from official race T-shirts to official race popcorn.

While Heartbreak Hill had its share of hotdog vendors and souvenir sellers, the entrepreneurs who caught the most attention from the fans and the media were the pint-sized variety.

"Get your brownies, apples, cookies," shouted 7-year-old Gabriel Eichler of Chestnut Hill. Eichler, his 12-year-old brother Jeremy and 7-year-old Aaron Schildkraut went into the food business last year "as a way to earn some extra money," he said.

"Last year," the younger Eichler said, "we got together and made about $18. If we sell everything this year, we will make about $100, but I don't think we will reach that point."

As for the profits, Eichler said "I think we will give half of the money to the starving people in Ethiopia."

Elsewhere on Heartbreak Hill, Girl Scouts Laura McAullife, 11, and Lexi Dew, 8, were walking up and down Commonwealth Avenue holding a sign. The sign asked race fans to throw their empty cans and bottles into a plastic bag they were carrying. The money raised from the returnables would go to the Ronald McDonald home for terminally ill children.

"I hope to collect about 1,000 cans," McAullife said enthusiastically.

The girls' troopmates pitched in by culling cans from the many green barrels set up along Commonwealth Avenue. There may have been a somewhat diminished supply of bottles and cans this year because of a strong presence put forth by local, state and MDC police, as well as the 26th Army National Gaurd Military Police unit. Not as many people were openly drinking beer this year.

A little rain does not dampen 3-year-old Benjamin Watanabe's enthusiasm for the race.

The marathon still has heart

As Viger passed City Hall, most people on the hill were milling around the median strip, on lawns or in houses fronting Commonwealth. The people came by car, bicycle, foot and skateboard to witness the 90th marathon, the first-ever in which prize money was offered.

The lull was broken by the sirens and lights of MDC motorcycles, signaling the approach of the racers. After the first wheelchair racers made their way toward Boston, the motorcycles were followed by trucks and a red 1986 Mercedes-Benz. While all the other vehicles were staples of marathons past, the Mercedes, pledged to the winner of the men's and women's divisions, was something new.

Following the car he would later own, Rob de Castella looked like a horse chasing a carrot as he chugged up Heartbreak Hill on his way to a record Boston finishing time of 2 hours, 7 minutes and 51 seconds. Well ahead of eventual second-place finisher Art Boileau of Canada, de Castella seemed not to notice the effect gravity has on a human body running up a steep incline. Perhaps the thought of owning the fine German touring car helped Castella overpower Heartbreak Hill.

In contrast to the obvious pain and effort the runners and wheelchair racers endured, Garden City resident Craig Hammer and friends viewed the race from the comfort of a rented Winnebago.

Hammer, his wife Beth and Richard and Tina Keller decided to beat the crowd this year by parking the hulking vehicle in the Carriage Lane, facing downhill toward City Hall.

"We've been coming here for years," Hammer said, "and it finally dawned on us to stop looking around for a backyard to use as a bathroom and rent this baby."

For around $200, the two couples received all the comforts of home, including a bed, shower, microwave oven, television, radio, soft chairs and, perhaps most important, a refrigerator/freezer unit.

A team full of winners

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Their brand of basketball is similar to the the kind of hoop played on the famed parquet floor.

Substitute freely. Hit the boards. Look for the man cutting down the lane to the hoop. Reach deep for the intangibles that separate winners from losers.

With so much in common with their namesakes from Boston, it is no surprise that the Newton Celtics are on the verge of being selected to play in the International Special Olympics at the University of Notre Dame next summer.

Earlier this month, the Recreation Department's special needs team moved one step closer to the tournament in South Bend by capturing the Masters Division B Championship in the Massachusetts Special Olympic Spring Games at Fort Devens.

The Celtics, comprised mainly of 10 developmentally disabled individuals from Newton, tore undefeated through four games in 36 hours to walk away with the title in only their second Special Olympic appearance.

Just as world champions typically wind up in the White House Rose Garden, the Garden City squad, attired in its finest finery, received equal treatment last week from Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

Last year's Spring Games found the Celtics on the losing end of several cliffhangers, but this year they staged a heart-stopping role reversal.

In the first tilt of the double elimination tourney, the team edged the Fitchburg-

NONANTUM — Increased traffic, minimal parking and a cutback in programs and privacy are issues now facing Nonantum Multi-Service Center patrons. They were just forced to move into a building half the size of their former location when their landlord decided to convert it to office space.

The new location — in a former lobster market on California Street — "was the only place available" to rent when the group was evicted on March 31 from their Silver Lake Avenue location, said David Berkeley, center director. "I looked at it, and I didn't think much of it. It's too small."

'It will be even nicer in the long run, because people will be more together.'

Mary Gauvreau

But even though the move meant less space, practically no privacy, limited parking, more traffic, a separate location for the chess group and the all-out abandonment of the yoga group, the most frequently-heard phrase used by patrons to describe the new location is, "It's cozy."

In fact, according to nurse Fran Nelligan, who runs health maintenance clinics at the center for the Newton Health Department, traffic is "one of our biggest concerns.

"The intersection has four lanes of traffic," she said. And the parking is even worse. The building's small parking lot can handle seven cars at most. Otherwise, senior citizens who patronize the center must park eight houses down the street in another lot. They can also park on the street in front of homes 50 yards away.

"It's a walk for some of them, especially if the weather is not good," Nelligan said.

Berkeley and others feel a crosswalk and a pedestrian light across both California and Bridge streets would help the situation. They have spoken of this need to the police department.

Another disadvantage of the new location is the limited privacy. Before, the ceramics group had its own room and students could go in there any time to work on projects. Now, the group meets once a week outside of the one room building.

The nurses station, which also used to have its own room in the old location, now is

Dumdums pushed for all police

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — All police officers may be issued .357 calibre hollow point bullets in the future, Police Chief William Quinn told an aldermanic budget hearing Monday night.

"If attacks against police officers continue," Quinn said, "then this is something I may have to consider later on."

Predicting a liberal-conservative schism on the issue, Quinn angrily accused the media for a holdup on his request for 10,000 rounds of the specialized ammunition.

"I knew that as soon as this thing got into the press they'd screw it up," he said, reacting to a story that appeared two weeks ago in the Newton Graphic and was later picked up by other Boston area newspapers and television stations. "This is going to bring the liberals out of the woodwork. I knew this was going to happen and now it's being held up. If I left the words hollow point off of my request list, we wouldn't be talking about this right now."

Quinn referred to the Public Safety and Transportation Committee's decision to separate the ammunition from other police department equipment requests that include bulletproof vests, bulletproof shields and other items for the city's 18-man Civil Disorder Unit (CDU). The CDU is charged with handling the city's hostage and terrorist situations.

'This is going to bring the liberals out of the woodwork.'

Chief Quinn

'This is just adding to the hysteria gripping the country.'

Ald. Barker

CDU commander Frank Gorgone said the ammunition is necessary because it has more killing power than conventional solid point bullets. That, he said, gives his officers a better chance of surviving any encounters with armed assailants.

"We talked to a lot of experts," he said. "What we found out is that the hollow point bullets have more stopping power, and do not ricochet on impact. Because the CDU is designed to deal with hostage situations and possible terrorist attacks, we need something that can stop them the first time."

While some aldermen scoffed at the concept of Newton police using such high-powered ammunition, Quinn pointed out that there have been incidents recently where that kind of force could have been required.

"When we went in to pick up the Aquinos and drive them to the airport," he said, "the FBI told us to carry machine guns. This is just one example of the kind of situations that we are involved in that we need everything we can to protect our men."

Alderman Carol Robinson agreed. "There are people in this city from all over the world who might have somebody come after them. A bullet is a bullet. As long as we are not going to do what Scotland Yard does and not arm the police, we might as well give them all the protection we can," she said.

Alderman Rodney Barker strongly disagreed.

"Why don't we just give them nukes," he said. "Regular bullets do enough damage. This is just adding to the hysteria that is gripping the country. If we ever did have a civil disorder that would require these kinds of bullets, we'd call in the army or National Guard anyway."

Quinn, however, denied that the request, which was made only hours after American warplanes bombed Libya, had anything to do with the current world situation.

"This has nothing to do with Libya," he said. "This group was formed three years ago. You just don't come in with a sheet of requests an hour after you hear the president bombed Libya."

Mayor escalates attack on latest school budget

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann wants to know why the School Department is asking for more funds in next year's budget when its own financial expert has predicted fiscal gloom for the city.

"That's the paradox here," Mann said at his weekly press conference. "Given the warnings, how does one answer the call for fiscal responsibility?"

The School Department is seeking a $46.4 million budget for fiscal 1987. Mann has slashed $1.2 million from that figure.

Last week, the department took its case to the aldermanic Programs and Planning Committee, which passed a resolution recommending that $1 million of Mann's cuts be restored.

The Board of Aldermen has the power to reduce Mann's school budget figure but it can only advise the mayor to restore funds he has cut.

Mann declined to say how he would react if the Programs and Planning resolution was adopted by the full board and presented to him.

But he did say, "A resolution is easy to vote for because it is nonbinding."

School officials are making their appeal for more funds despite the fact that Assistant Superintendent Vincent Silluzio forcasted hard times in a five-year financial study he released last April.

"The gap between citywide expenditures and revenues remains significant," Silluzio said in that study.

The projections are "even more dismal" because after Bigelow Junior High is shut down this June, no more schools can be closed for further savings, Silluzio pointed out.

To balance the entire municipal budget in the coming years, Newton either will have to create new sources of revenue or reduce educational and city services, said Silluzio. The only other option is a voter override of of Proposition 2 1/2, he said.

Silluzio's projections - which match those made by the city's budget experts - make it impossible to understand the School Department's budget request, said Mann.

The city is faced with employee salary hikes, millions of dollars in municipal building repairs, an estimated $17.1 million sewer system overhaul and skyrocketing trash collection costs, he noted

"The present-day component and future desires don't meet," said the mayor, pounding his hands together.

Budget gap varies

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The gap between the 1987 budget proposal of the mayor and the school department is apparently a lot less than reported.

The reason for the fiscal differences that remain may be school officials' decision not to cut as many teachers as they originally indicated, aldermanic Finance Committee Chairman Paul Coletti said Monday night.

It has been reported that Mayor Theodore D. Mann and the School Department are $1.2 million apart in their fiscal 1987 budget calculations.

Mann has emphasized forecasts of fiscal gloom in pressing for a fiscal 1987 school budget of $45.2 million. The School Department has argued it needs all of its $46.4 million request to maintain the high quality of existing programs.

But Finance Committee member Rodney Barker said the real difference is more like $300,000. Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, confirmed that figure.

"I think the Executive Department's perception of the difference of opinion is in the neighborhood you discussed," he said.

But pressed by Barker to explain the reason for the difference, Cirillo said, "We're not prepared to discuss it now in public."

DeNucci top contender in contest for auditor

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Most local political observers are having trouble locating any obstacles standing in the way of State Representative Joseph DeNucci's first bid for statewide office.

The already optimistic outlook brightened considerably this past weekend when DeNucci (D — Newton, Waltham) handily captured the informal support of most of the Boston Democratic City Committee in his campaign for state auditor.

In a straw poll, the West Newton native came away with 71 of the 138 votes cast to defeat his three Democratic opponents — Boston City Councilor Maura Hennigan (36), Boston City Councilor Charles Yancey (26) and Rep. Richard T. Moore of Uxbridge (5).

While DeNucci considers the vote "a major victory in foreign territory," many election watchers are wondering whether any part of the state can be considered "foreign" to a man who started out as a middleweight boxer and has since progressed to the point where U.S. Rep. Barney Frank, D-Newton, will place his name in nomination at the Democratic State Convention.

"He's certainly the prohibitive favorite in the race and he deserves to be," according to Boston political consultant Michael Goldman, whose firm is guiding the political fate of a number of well-known candidates.

If promotion to a higher office is the reward for performance, Goldman said, then DeNucci should have no problem moving up because liberals and conservatives alike consider his work in the Statehouse "outstanding."

"As chairman of the Human Services Committee, he's been able to bridge enormous gaps among the various political philosophies in the Legislature.

"Certainly, he comes into this thing with lots of people who genuinely respect and care for him. They not only think he's a good politician, they also think he's a really good guy," Goldman added.

Skip Sesling, DeNucci's senior research analyst, said DeNucci's boxing career and his work on human service issues provides something his Democratic opponents have yet to attain — excellent statewide name recognition.

"And he has a good base to start with right here," Sesling added.

Rep. Peter G. Trombley, D-Waltham, said DeNucci's campaign has "no major weaknesses."

"Once people get to know more about him, I think they'll realize he's a strong statewide candidate. This campaign is really coming together."

Noting the numerous, highly visible officeholders who attended DeNucci's recent kick-off fundraiser in Waltham, Trombley added, "Politicians generally don't stick their necks out for a loser."

> 'There are no obstacles. At this point, he has to be considered the favorite.'
> Rep. David Cohen

Former congressman James Shannon, now in the running for attorney general, called DeNucci "a terrific candidate" for state auditor.

"He's as good a candidate as anybody and he's the type of campaigner who will see his political base expand rather quickly," Shannon said.

Rep. David B. Cohen, D-Newton, found it difficult to identify a weak link in DeNucci's bid.

"There are no obstacles. At this point, he has to be considered the favorite," he said.

Anthony M. Mandile, the Ward 5 city councilor from Waltham, was even more effusive about DeNucci's chances.

"There's no doubt he will win. It's just a matter of how much of a landslide it will be," he said.

Joseph Newman, DeNucci's convention cooridinator and campaign manager, refused to speculate on any problems DeNucci might encounter as he takes his campaign to the state's far-flung reaches.

"We're not running a campaign based on weakness. We will emphasize his past service, his commitment to the citizens of Massachusetts and his record," Newman said.

Publicly, DeNucci is looking to capture the official support of 15 percent of the delegates attending next month's party convention, but privately he is working toward a victory of much larger proportions.

"We're contacting every party chairman in every city and town in the state. So far, the response has been very, very gratifying," he said.

Real story behind van 'highjacking' revealed

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A van driver for Shreve, Crump & Low who reported a week ago that the store's van containing about $16,000 worth of jewelry was hijacked at gunpoint in Newton Centre has been arrested and arraigned in connection with the theft.

Jon Ventura, 22, of Roslindale, was arraigned last week in district court on charges of larceny of property over $100 and filing a false crime report. He was released on personal recognizance, and the case was continued to May 20.

Ventura was arrested by MetroPolice at his home on outstanding warrants for a traffic violation and two misdemeanor counts of larceny by check.

Further questioning led Ventura to admit he stole the van himself, according to police.

Detective Sgt. James Celino said police were skeptical of Ventura's story from the beginning.

Ventura originally reported that a maroon station wagon smashed into the back of the van as he was turning from Beacon Street onto Hammond Pond Parkway around 11 a.m. while working on a Saturday.

He said he stopped his van and got out to exchange papers with the driver of the station wagon behind him. Instead, he said the man pulled his jacket open, showing a gun, and said, "Get out of my way."

Ventura claimed the man then drove the van off toward Route 9, and that another man in the maroon station wagon followed him.

Ventura then went to a service station in Newton Centre Square and called Newton Police.

Celino said the story came into doubt when Newton Police recovered the van about four hours later on Montvale Road, which meant the thief would have had to return to the same area where the theft occurred, as reported by Ventura.

Celino and Metropolice Detectives Gerry Gately and Lemuel Bell arrested Ventura on the outstanding warrants and told him that his story was full of holes.

Celino said Ventura, who had been employed by the company for just six weeks, admitted to the crime and agreed to cooperate in returning the loot. Celino said a small amount of the rings, watches and jewelry has already been recovered, but the rest is still missing.

BC honors Cardinal Sin

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Philippine Cardinal Jaime L. Sin and popular singer Lionel Ritchie are among those who will receive honorary degrees for humanitarianism at Boston College's May 19 commencement ceremonies.

Cardinal Sin, who will be the main speaker, played a key role in his country's recent painful transition from despotic to democratic rule.

Ritchie, who along with Michael Jackson wrote the song, "We Are the World," was one of the organizers of the USA for Africa campaign that generated millions of dollars for famine-stricken Ethiopia.

The 57-year-old cardinal has served as archbishop of Manila, the Phillipine capital, since 1974. A few years later, he was named cardinal.

It was Cardinal Sin who rallied the Philippine people to the side of two government officials demanding that President Ferdinand Marcos step down in favor of Corazon Aquino.

Millions of Filipinos responded by surrounding the military camps from which Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and General Fidel Ramos were leading their revolution.

"He just asked the people to go to the military camps to protect 'my two friends,'" said Father John Brannigan, who spent 16 years in the Philippines and is now studying at BC.

The dramatic demonstration was a catalyst in forcing Marcos to hand over the presidency to Aquino in late February. The nation was in turmoil over a disputed election in which both sides claimed victory. Aquino accused the Marcos forces of vote-count fraud, a charge largely supported by a delegation of U.S. observers.

Cardinal Sin's actions bear a special relevance to BC and Newton, as Aquino and her husband, Benigno, lived for several years at 175 Commonwealth Ave. "I can see her home from my window," said BC spokesman Doug Whiting.

Benigno and Corazon Aquino had been living in exile in Newton. He was assassinated on his return to the Philippines.

Both Time and Newsweek praised Cardinal Sin in their coverage of the Philippines power struggle.

"Cardinal Sin threw the weight of the Roman Catholic Church against Marcos," said Time.

In 1961, May 1 was set aside by the American people for their liberties and loyalty to the US.

The event will be held at McElroy Commons on the BC's Chestnut Hill campus. Tickets cost $45 each; $450 for a table of 10. For more information call Anne Peters at 552-4378.

Youth seriously injured in front of home

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A Newton youth was seriously injured this weekend when he was struck by a van on Commonwealth Avenue. He is in fair condition, according to New England Medical Center patient information, after being in intensive care for two days.

At about 6 p.m. Friday, John Umina Jr., 9, was playing in the front yard of his home with his brother when he ran down the driveway and into the street, according to police. Police said the youth tried to stop himself when he saw the van coming, but lost his balance and fell forward into the van.

"It's a miracle he came out of it at all," the youth's father, John Umina, said. "We thought he was dead when we came out and saw him lying on the street."

Umina said his son broke his jaw and two ribs and has numerous abrasions on his face and body.

The operator of the van, Kenneth J. Leary of Waltham, told police he did not see the boy until it was too late. He said the boy darted out from behind the driveway bushes. Leary tried to "give the boy aid" until the emergency medical teams arrived, police said.

It appears the boy was struck by the right front side of the van, but it is unclear whether the van ran over the youth, police said.

"My older son said he saw the van go over John's body but from his condition, it's difficult to believe," Umina said. "It looks more like the the truck hit him in the face."

Police said there is no evidence that Leary was speeding and it does not appear any complaints will be sought.

The youth was taken to Newton-Wellesley Hospital for preliminary treatment Friday night and later was transferred to New England Medical Center. Later, the boy was moved out of intensive care and according to his father, he is doing well.

"We just got back from the hospital and he was walking around a little bit today," Umina said. "We feel a lot better about his condition today than we did Saturday."

Rape charge leads to indictment

CAMBRIDGE — A Middlesex County grand jury last week indicted a West Newton man on a charge that he raped a Newtonville woman at her home last April 3.

Indicted on a single charge of rape was Timothy S. Houston, 21, of 208 Cherry St.

The alleged incident occurred two weeks ago, in the late afternoon, after Houston knocked on the door of her home and then forced his way inside, according to police reports. The woman was treated at Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

At a district court arraignment earlier this month, Houston pleaded innocent to related charges. He is expected to answer the indictment formerly at an arraignment in Middlesex County Superior Court, expected to be scheduled soon.

Houston has posted bail in the amount of $10,000 surety with a $1,000 cash alternative. The case is being prosecuted by Assistant Middlesex District County District Adrienne Lynch.

Richardson out of race for AG's seat

NEWTON — Attorney Paul Richardson announced last week he will not continue his push for the office of Middlesex County District Attorney.

"It's too bad, but I've worked with Scott and I think he's a good district attorney," Richardson said of his former boss, District Attorney Scott Harshbarger, who recently re-entered the DA race after he dropped out of the contest for Attorney General.

"It was total fun while it lasted," Richardson, a Newton resident, said of his brief campaign. He promised to help Harshbarger with his own drive for re-election.

Businger clears the way for Lois Pines

NEWTON — State Rep. John A. Businger, D-Brookline, has dropped out of the race to succeed State Sen. Jack Backman, D-Newton/Brookline.

Businger said a number of factors played a role in his decision, including his belief that the Senate post constituted "somewhat of a sideways promotion."

Geographic considerations also prompted the move, he said.

The sheer number of voters who constitute the seat's Newton constituency have a decided advantage in determining the outcome of the race.

That advantage has taken on greater proportions in light of the crowded field seeking to succeed State Rep. Joseph DeNucci, a race sure to stimulate significant voter turnout in the northern half of the Garden City.

Businger's decision could clear the way for former state representative and Newton alderman Lois Pines to regain a slot on Beacon Hill.

Pines, who has already piled up an impressive number of endorsements, is still not ready to gear down her campaign, however.

"I'm pleased," she said of Businger's withdrawal. "But, it's not over until it's over. There's still a couple of more weeks before the filing deadline and we don't know what's going to happen.

"We're going to continue to work just as hard as we have in the past," said Pines, who scheduled a number of visible promotions for use at the Newton and Brookline locations of the Boston Marathon.

Local man's challenge of embargo nixed

BOSTON — A federal judge has rejected a suit brought by a Newton businessman and three others, challenging the trade embargo President Reagan declared last year against Nicaragua.

In his ruling Monday, U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity also upheld the president's declaration of a national emergency that was used to justify the trade embargo.

The suit was filed by Joseph L. Sholkin of Newton, owner of Beacon Products Corp. and Boval Products Corp., two plastics companies. It claimed the president exceeded his statutory and constitutional authority by imposing the embargo May 1, 1985.

Sholkin had reached an agreement in February 1985 to send plastic molds and components to a Nicaraguan firm in return for half of the profits from the sale of the household products manufactured from the molds. He also made an offer to sell machinery to the Nicaraguan firm.

The suit argued that Nicaragua did not pose an unusual and extraordinary threat so a national emergency was not justified.

But Garrity said whether or not there was an unusual and extraordinary threat was a political question and not subject to judicial review.

Sex discrimination case starts probe into hiring

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A proposed $20,000 settlement of a sex discrimination case may spark a review of the city's employee hiring practices.

The Board of Aldermen voted to offer Judith A. Notartomaso the settlement last week. At the same time, they passed a resolution calling for a review of the city's employee screeening and hiring practices.

On April 14, the aldermanic Finance Committee voted unanimously to recommend appropriating $20,000 to settle the case. The matter was discussed in a closed door session.

"The settlement was only half the issue," said Alderman Richard McGrath last weeek. "The deeper, more pertinent parts will be brought out when the resolution is discussed by the Finance Committee."

Because of the executive session, McGrath said he was limited in the amount he could reveal.

But while the resolution calls for an evaluation of hiring practices by all city departments, McGrath said he is "particularly interested in the screening process of the Police Department."

The purpose of the resolution is "just to avoid" in the future any problems which "may have occurred" in the Notartomaso job screening, Alderman Richard Bullwinkle, vice chairman of the FinCom, said.

Notartomaso, 39, of 51 Wildwood Avenue, filed a suit last August charging the city with sex discrimination in failing to hire her for the Police Department.

She is now completing a course at the Boston Police Academy in preparation for a position on the Police Department.

Her name appeared appeared on a civil service hiring list in 1982. Assistant City Solicitor Michael Baseman has said she was not hired then because there were "other candidates we felt were better qualified."

She would have been appointed to the force in 1984, but she failed the requirements of a city physical. The West Newton woman has explained she weighed six pounds more than the civil service standard.

The city appointed Notartomaso a cadet in January after her name appeared near the top of the list in 1985 and she passed a city physical. A second woman and two men were named cadets along with her.

Her name appeared so high on the most recent civil service list in part because of a statute that gives preference to relatives of police officers who die in the line of duty, Baseman has said.

Michael F. Greeley, her father, died in line of duty on Christmas Day 1970. He was a 34-year veteran of the force.

A Civil Service Commission decision that Notartomaso may have been improperly bypassed in 1982 may also have contributed to her high ranking on the list.

Our own version of 'Celtics pride'

A brief, informal ceremony in the mayor's office last week gave some well-deserved recognition to a project that might just be the single most unqualifiedly positive program in the City of Newton: the Newton Celtics.

The occasion for the recognition was the special needs team's capturing their division crown at the recent Special Olympics Spring Games. They are now on the verge of being selected to play in the International Special Olympics this coming summer.

The winners, in any sport, are usually those with the best score at the end of the game. But, for anyone who has kept up with the Newton Celtics over the past couple of years, it's obvious that these kids are winners regardless of the final score.

They're alert. They're enthusiastic. They're positive. They're confident. In the past year alone, they've matured marvellously. To Coach Rick Cass, Recreation Department personnel and all those who have contributed to the success of the Newton Celtics we offer our sincere congratulations and thanks. Congratulations for emphasizing the "special" in special needs. Thanks for giving the city a team we can be very proud of.

Rare unanimity in Ethics Commission vote

A lot of nice things were said about the state's Ethics Commission this month. In return, it's appropriate to say something good about Gov. Dukakis and the two legislative branches. They came together in removing a cloud over authority with total acceptance of the bill restoring enforcement powers.

If there was reason to doubt the sincerity of the Senate when it permitted the bill to get lost in the prorogation last December, it was dispelled. The Senate recorded a 33-0 vote in favor of the amending action after the House, which has been carrying the ball on the corrective effort had sent it along again, this time with a 139-1 count.

At the signing, the governor pointed to an eight-year record of "sensitivity and fairness" in implementation. What the enabling legislation set out to do was to insure there would be no conflict of interest among public employees throughout the conflict. Mixing a private business connection with a city, town or state job became a no-no. Elected officials, commission or committee appointees all came within its purview, no matter how high the office.

The consequences were significant, leading to fines in a number of cases. A challenge of this power revealed the flaw in the original law which had to be remedied.

House Speaker George Keverian, a champion of the ethics body from away back, hails the recent action as "a legal mandate" to enforce both the conflict of interest and financial disclosure laws. With some 215 municipal cases on hold, the commission's work can go forward.

Of related significance is the fact that existence of the fully empowered Ethics Commission is a deterrent, promoting integrity in administrative government. Requests for clarification on individual situations have been an important part of the picture. Massachusetts is doing well by itself, thanks to the unanimity of the lawmakers.

Marking Time

School budget out of whack

By Mark White

It's like deja vu. I have seen this scenario before.

When I first got elevated to the Board of Aldermen in 1973 there was a lot of criticism of the school budget.

These were the days of fiscal autonomy and the School Committee could basically spend as they saw fit.

Unfortunately what was fit for them was not fit for the Board of Aldermen. So, in spite of the law, the board voted to cut the school budget.

A lawsuit then ensued, but the end result was that the issue became sc well publicized that the community voted out six of the eight members of the School Committee.

I voted against the cut based on the law and my belief that the school system needed the money to ensure the continuation of special programs and inventive courses.

This past week, it happened all over again. This time, the mayor has cut $1 million out of the school budget and, once again, the School Committee is crying to the Board of Aldermen.

And, as in 1974, the board is listening to the school lobby and recently voted 5-0, in committee, to ask the mayor to restore the cut.

If we have come full circle since 1974, I'd like to help reverse the direction. The board should sustain the cut.

The past school committee's handling of the salary negotiations bordered on arrogance.

As I wrote in this column a few months ago, our School Committee is the only committee in the state to incorporate the education bonus, guaranteed by the state for only two years, into the salary structure, which will provide the bonus for long past the two years guaranteed by the state.

Instead of paying a one-time bonus to the teachers, we're on the hook to pay a continous bonus.

Now, I believe that teachers should be better paid. If I didn't believe it, I probably shouldn't go home because my wife is a teacher.

However, I don't believe that special interests should take advantage of the law, any law. The School Committee, controlled by teachers, ex-teachers and people with backgrounds in education, took advantage of the situation.

Furthermore, while enrollment continues to decline, the school budget goes up.

For some reason, the School Committee has decided to return to the days of fiscal autonomy of years gone by instead of entering today's era of Proposition 2 1/2.

As strongly as I opposed the cut during the years of fiscal autonomy, that's how strongly I support the cut this time.

Many times, I have criticized the mayor for his handling of controversial city issues. This time, I applaud his guts in the face of the school lobby.

This time, the aldermen should analyze the figures and refuse to restore the money.

The committee's actions on salary negotiations will cost this city thousands of dollars over the years in additional teacher monies, not to mention how much it has cost the city in police and fire salaries, since they demanded parity with the teachers.

The Board of Aldermen should demonstrate the same fiscal courage that they have shown with other departments.

Despite what everybody predicted, including myself, Proposition 2 1/2 has not spelled doom for the school system.

Furthermore, to use the large surplus as a reason to fund the excesses of the School Committee is unfair to the taxpayers of this city.

Some of that surplus should be returned to the citizens of this city as a tax reduction. It's about time!

This is the time for the Board of Aldermen to face up to its fiscal responsibility and force the School Committee to do the same.

Once-tightened rules getting looser under the gold dome

By George B. Merry

Legislative reform in Massachusetts may be like an electric switch that can be turned on or off to suit lawmakers' fancy.

Those who think otherwise were not paying attention at a recent state Senate session, when a much-heralded 1985 rule tightening was relaxed, for largely political reasons. That performance, sure to receive no applause from good-government interests, involved setting aside a requirement that all cleared legislation must be in print not less than 24 hours before consideration.

Obviously there are occasions when temporary suspension of that rule may be essential to meet an emergency, such as impending payless paydays for public employees. But such situations are rare.

Certainly there was nothing to suggest that Senate delay in taking up the legislation in question would create a crisis. The legislation in question, which is strongly opposed by the Massachusetts Medical Association, would pave the way for certain licensed nurses to prescribe medication, under some circumstances. It merited the informed consideration of every senator. That presumably would be difficult if the measure was not in print and thus available to lawmakers and their constituents.

While legislators should be free to vote their conscience, that need not shut the door on what constituents might have to say. Without copies of a bill, how can the public know what is proposed, especially on measures that some day could affect them?

As it worked out, when cooler heads prevailed, consideration of the legislation was postponed. But the fact remains that the Senate, by slightly more than the required 2 to 1, had stood ready to act on the legislation, before it was in print and thus available for public scrutiny.

Only 12 senators -- six Republicans and six Democrats -- voted against suspending the rule that bars floor action on legislation not yet in print. Ironically, most of the staunchest and loudest supporters of upgrading proceedings to better serve the public apparently saw nothing wrong with clearing the way for legislation to be hustled through, before printed copies were in hand. That in disregard of a particularly laudable restriction they helped initiate.

These perhaps sometimes reformers include Sens. Carol C. Amick (D) of Bedford, Jack H. Backman (D) of Brookline, George Bachrach (D) of Watertown, John P. Houston (D) of Worcester, Richard A. Kraus (D) of Arlington, and Patricia McGovern (D) of Lawrence.

The "yes" vote could prove somewhat of a political embarrassment for Senator Bachrach, in particular, since he is reaching for the Eighth Congressional District seat being vacated by US House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. His reputation for "independence" and intolerance for legislative "business as usual" had been generally viewed as one of his major assets.

While the Watertown liberal may be no less a reformer, his willingness to waive an important rule in the interest of less than justified expediency certainly raises questions concerning his commitment to meaningful change in the legislative process.

The clumsily orchestrated move to suspend the rule appeared to be little more than a means of frustrating attempts by Sen. David H. Locke (R) of Wellesley a sharp critic of the legislation being pushed by Sen. Edward L. Burke (D) of Framingham.

Having proved his point and gained the rule suspension, Senator Burke may have had little choice but to go along with the postponement. All of which suggests that, irrespective of the merits or lack of merits of the measure, it is far too important to be rushed through without informed debate.

Whether many of those who voted for or against suspending the rule knew what the pending legislation was all about is uncertain. But what is certain is less than a dozen senators were in the chamber during the brief debate on whether to act on a proposal not yet in print for public review.

Health care, the issue at hand, is not a partisan matter, or it shouldn't be. The decision whether this legislation makes it into the statute books clearly should not be based on partisan considerations.

Requiring bill to be in print before they come up in either the Senate or House would not seem to be much of an obstacle. Those lawmakers who think otherwise might do the cause of good government a favor and move on to other pursuits, where expertise in rubber-stamping might be more tolerable.

Uncut budget badly needed

By Shiela Liberman

To the Board of Aldermen:

The Newton Council of Parent-Teacher Associations is an organization comprised of representatives of Newton's 20 schools. It includes parents, teachers and principals, all of whom are deeply concerned about Newton's 9,700 school children. We are taxpayers in the City of Newton.

For several months, the PTA Council has closely followed the budget process as it has progressed through the School Committee. On the basis of our examination of the budget, coupled with our continuous monitoring of the school system, we have adopted the following position:

We are in full support of the FY87 budget as passed by the School Committee.

A recent newspaper article on the Newton Schools stated the reputation of the schools was considered to be "in jeopardy"–a possibility because of cuts in the School Committee's recommended budget. As taxpayers, we know well that the reputation of the school system is a very important drawing card that makes Newton a desirable place to live and keeps the property values high. We are also concerned with what the schools deliver, with the kind of educational opportunities they provide for our children.

We are certainly aware of fiscal constraints and the need for tight control over expenditures. The School Committee has addressed this problem year after year and, for the past several years, has cut consistently--schools and teachers being the most promient casualities. You are well-acquainted with the statistics in those areas.

We hear over and over again the question: "Why, if enrollment is declining does it cost more and more to educate fewer and fewer children?" On the simplist level, the answer is obvious. Everything costs more, and in every area of our lives we're paying more and getting less. Take the supermarket, for example. Many of us have stopped putting "extras" into our shopping carts. We buy less expensive cuts of meat. Yet, when our purchases are totaled at the check-out, our bill keeps going up.

We've closed schools. But it costs more and more to maintain the remaining schools. We have two first-rate high schools, for example. Declining enrollment doesn't eliminate the need for maintaining those buildings or the programs that take place inside. Indeed, the 46-member secondary school symposium has been meeting since 1984 to develop a plan for dealing efficiently and cost-effectively with declining enrollment in the secondary school. And, in the meantime, we still have 15 elementary schools which we must be supported.

Equipment replacement is another topic we hear about. Year after year, the Schoool Department has deferred replacement of equipment. We do this in our personal lives as well. Squeezing more miles out of an unreliable old car instead of buying a new one. Buying a new washing machine instead of a sofa. But, eventually, we have to buy that new car and sofa. And now is the time that out schools need new equipment replacements for 20-year-old microscopes and out-of-date maps, to mention only a few. If we don't replace equipment this year, will it be easier to do so next year? It doesn't seem likely.

And what of the teacher escrow positions, the postions held in reserve in order to deal with unexpected changes in enrollment? These are not "extra" teachers to be plugged into the system at somebody's whim. These are teachers who will be used to level off bulges that have been demonstrated historically to occur in the distribution of children across the sytem, as well as to maintain class sizes at a reasonable level. Children do not come in neat multiples of 23 fourth graders or 20 second graders, for example, and it is sometimes necessary to add another class at a particular grade level in order to even out the numbers and keep class size down. As the demands upon our teachers continue to increase, as we add more and more programs to keep pace with changing technology (computer instrution, e.g.) or social needs (drugs and alchol abuse programs), the need for maintaining class size at an educationally feasible level increases. Escrow positions address this need directly.

Teachers salaries have also increased, just as our own incomes have increased. As in other professions, attractiveness is linked directly to salary–it means little to derive satisfaction from your work if you're struggling to make ends meet. The increase is fair and will help Newton to draw more fine teachers in the future, fine teachers who are the basic element in our school system.

We believe that the school budget as passed by the School Committee is extremely reasonable and directly addresses the issues of program, class size, and the quality of education that we in Newton have come to expect, if not demand. We recognize and agree with the need to hold down costs. We feel that this budget faces that need squarely.

We ask, the Board of Alderman, to request that Mayor Mann restore the budget to the amount as presented by the School Committee for FY87.

(Shiela Liberman is a Newton Centre resident and member of the Newton Council of PTA's. Buzz Birnbaum read the above to the aldermen on the Programs and Planning Committee just before they reviewed the School Department's latest budget.)

As Nazi scandal simmers

Waldheim cries 'witch hunt'

By George Jahn

LEIBNITZ, Austria — In market squares and town halls, crowds clap and cheer when Kurt Waldheim says allegations that he hid a Nazi past are lies, calculated to hurt his chances in Austria's presidential election May 4.

The former United Nations secretary-general has made the accusations the centerpiece of his campaign, drawing enthusiastic applause with claims he is the victim of a witch hunt by opponents at home and abroad.

Waldheim claims he is not worried by suggestions of some Israeli parliamentarians and U.S. congressmen that he should be barred from Israel and the United States if he becomes president, a largely ceremonial post in Austria.

"It is completely ridiculous to say today that I will be rejected tomorrow abroad," Waldheim told The Associated Press while he campaigned in Styria province. "As a matter of fact, I continue to enjoy a great degree of respect abroad. No government in the world has spoken up in criticism up to now."

The World Jewish Congress claims Waldheim has covered up a past that included membership in Nazi suborganizations, and in an army unit implicated in the deaths of 43,000 Greek Jews and atrocities against thousands of Yugoslav partisans.

While acknowledging recently that he erred in not detailing his past until forced to, Waldheim denies involvement in war crimes and with Nazi groups.

All Austrian opinion polls put Waldheim ahead of Kurt Steyrer, the former Socialist minister of health and his main rival.

The controversy has split Austrian public opinion into vociferous pro and con factions and resulted in a flood of crank mail to Jewish groups. An unprecedented public statement by President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger has not seemed to clear the air.

After examining U.N. documents on Waldheim's wartime activities, Kirchschlaeger said in a televised address April 22 that Waldheim must have known of atrocities against partisans. But he maintained the documents provided by the World Jewish Congress do not support the claim that Waldheim was aware of the deportation of Greek Jews to death camps.

Waldheim contends the Kirchschlaeger comments exonerate him, and his conservative People's Party agrees. Socialist opponents say the main issue, why Waldheim covered up his past, remains unanswered.

THE KNOCK ON WALDHEIM'S DOOR

Waldheim referred to former Chancellor Bruno Kreisky when asked in a recent interview if he should drop out of the presidential contest.

As Socialist chancellor between 1970 and 1983, Kreisky, a non-observant Jew, frequently condemned Israel's Middle East policies and was sometimes critical of the United States. That, and his friendship with radical Arab leaders, made him a controversial figure in both Israel and the United States.

"Look, Kreisky was frequently attacked on visits to the United States," said Waldheim. "And yet, nobody said Kreisky cannot remain chancellor, he must resign, because there are people in America who do not like him."

Waldheim commented during a brief pause in a day of campaigning that began in Graz, Styria's capital, and took him to several communities near the Yugoslav border, a region of fierce battles between Germans and Yugoslav partisans toward the end of World War II.

At Leibnitz, a town of 6,500 three miles north of the border, about 400 people huddled under umbrellas in a heavy rain for hours to welcome Waldheim.

Smiling broadly, he approached arm-in-arm with his wife Elizabeth, led by a marching band and white-shirted youths carrying Austrian red-white-red flags. The crowd cheered and joined the Waldheims in the national anthem.

To loud and prolonged applause, Waldheim said, "I basically did nothing else than what 100,000 other Austrians did during this (war) time. I was a respectable soldier."

The crowd clapped wildly as Waldheim described the accusations against him as an attack on a whole generations of Austrians and asked youthful members of his audience "for understanding of what your parents and grandparents did in these years."

At Waldheim's stop at nearby Deutschlandsberg, the crowd of supporters was five times that in Leibnitz.

Waldheim used the term "defamation" five times in the first half of a 20-minute speech at Deutschlandsberg and was frequently interrupted by ovations.

Waldheim drew the loudest and longest applause when he said he and thousands of other Austrians only did their duty during the war "and we, my friends, are not criminals because of that."

Most in the crowds were middle-age or older.

Bela Lengyel, 98, said of the accusations against Waldheim: "Nothing but a great big dirty trick, because it has been proven that we all were respectable soldiers and we fought well."

Lengyel said he was a field marshal with the Hungarian army, which supported Germany during World War II.

"People will bow low to Mr. Waldheim's position as federal president," he said.

Critical of schools' decision to cancel trips

To the editor:

A poorly orchestrated decision was put into effect, regarding Newton Public Schools' sponsorship of present and future cultural trips to Europe. I know this well, because I am one of the parents who almost suffered the effects of this negative policy. My daughter's Junior High Troubadours choral group trip to London was coldly and abruptly cancelled on the eve before departure.

I am also one of the parents willing and able to pay and substitute for one of the Newton personnel chaperone slots alotted this trip. This helped set into motion the April 16th departure of a group of eight girls traveling independent of their families, but totally released from Newton Public Schools' sponsorship. The travel group also contained one other "free agent" chaperone and two families originally slated to travel with the Troubadours as singers and chaperones, making a total of 16 people out of the original 50.

Our small group would not have had this opportunity if all of us had not individually contacted the Newton Music Dept. about desires to go ahead without Newton sponsorship. We all had felt that it was our legal right to exercise our decision-making abilities, with regard to picking-up-the-pieces of a shattered concertizing and touring trip of London and its suburbs.

It was only through the last-minute cooperation of the Newton Music Dept. that we parents had access to each other, the two newly-acquired chaperones, and our trip vouchers. We wonder by how many more our small group would have increased had Newton administration been immediately helpful and encouraging to parents who wanted to go ahead with plans to salvage this London tour.

We are all part of a public school system which prides itself on training its students to think for themselves and logically work out alternative solutions to problems as they occur. In light of this truism, Newton Public School administration's travel boycott appeared hysterically impulsive, and surely was felt to be obnoxiously authoritarian. This is especially so, when one considers that our federal government carefully avoided calling the Libyan situation a "national emergency."

These prepaid arrangements and dreams of travel abroad need not have been so quickly and casually dismissed by a flick of a tongue or two - especially by those not participating in the dreams and plans of the trips themselves.

In the future, permit us the right to exercise our choice in matters which directly affect us. At the very least, allow us prompt access to prearranged plans and lists, so that more of us are able to regroup and replan our own fates.

Leominster Celtics, 33-31. The next morning, they cruised past the North Shore Jazz, 32-20.

Less than 12 hours later, the Celtics played the Hampshire Pioneers in what Newton Special Needs Director Karen Flannery described as "the most exciting game I've ever been to in my life."

Down 14-6 at the end of the first half and facing a possible rout, the Celtics pulled together behind the efforts of Chris DiSabato, team captain Robert Sandwell and Chris Birnton, but still found themselves trailing by six at the beginning of the fourth quarter.

It was at that point that they showed how far they've come since Coach Rick Cass founded the Celtics in the fall of 1984.

Birnton, 21, of Newtonville, called his teammates together and told them to shut down the Pioneers completely on offense, a feat even Cass thought impossible.

But his players proved him wrong. Bolstered by impenetrable defense and the rebounding strength of Brinton, Sandwell and Darryl Eldridge, the Celtics held their opponents scoreless and narrowed the deficit to a lone basket with only two minutes remaining.

They went ahead to stay, 18-16, a minute later and exploded into a frenzied celebration when the final buzzer sounded.

"They were so psyched. There was just no stopping them. It was like they won the championship, but we still had one game to go," said Cass, now the city's assistant special needs director and an instructor at Kennedy Hospital in Brighton.

The next morning, the Celtics took home the trophy by trouncing the Pioneers, 22-14.

Cass, 26, of Needham, said the secret to this year's success was the creation of The Route 128 Special Needs League, which allowed the Celtics to play 20 games over a three-month period against their peers in the greater Boston area.

Many of the players from the 128 League befriended the Celtics and cheered them on to victory at Fort Devens.

If they can repeat their performance at the Special Olympics' State Championships on July 20-22 at Boston University, the Celtics are virtually assured of a play-off spot for the international competition in 1987.

The team only has one commercial sponsor, the Kwik-Kopy on Needham Street, and will need to raise a substantial amount of money to make the trip to Indiana, Cass said.

"Two years ago, they never even talked to each other. Now, they're a very tight unit socially and they've made friends with people they never knew before. They're becoming aware of the people around them and learning the meaning of teamwork.

"I'm proud of them. They've showed real development," he added.

Terror squad earns its keep

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A $4,000 State Department check is on its way to the Garden City's crack anti-terrorist squad for providing protection to a Haitian diplomat who lives here.

Police Chief William F. Quinn said federal authorities have agreed to reimburse the Civil Disorders Unit (CDU) for their work guarding the residence of Haiti Counsel General Wesner Chamoine.

At the State Department's request, two or three members of the special tactical unit provided round-the-clock protection for Chamoine and his family after he received numerous threats on his life.

The assassination threats occurred in the days following the fall of Haitian dictator "Baby Doc" Duvalier's regime and his subsequent flight to Europe earlier this year, Quinn said.

"We have some very substantial people of varying nationalities and beliefs living in this community. Many of them receive threats on their lives a couple of times each year," he said.

The CDU has been a topic for discussion recently as aldermen debated a $21,100 supplemental appropriation request aimed at outfitting the squad with additional equipment.

Quinn has asked the money to purchase 10,000 rounds of .357 caliber, hollow-point ammunition, three Remington rifles and scopes, five bullet-proof shields, 18 sets of "speedloaders," numerous items of foul-weather gear, nine voice-activated microphones and a variety of other equipment used in special operations.

The Haitian assignment was not the first time the CDU had been called in to provide protection for highly visible government officials living here or visiting the city.

Mayor questions school budget

Mann refused to say what areas the department should slash to meet his 1987 budget figure.

School Superintendent John Strand has said the department cut 12 less teachers than it normally would under declining enrollment. Those positions are being held in "escrow" to reduce any unexpectedly large classes next fall.

Despite this, Mann did not call for more staff reductions, saying instead that the School Committee must determine how many employees it needs.

"I'm not looking to fire teachers. That's not my role," he said.

He defended his own 1987 school budget, noting it is larger than last year's. The city has maintained its commitment to education over the years, he said.

Newton's class sizes, teacher salaries, student test scores and the percentage of youngsters going to college remain "very competitive" with the best school systems in the state, Mann noted.

Donovan new GSA director

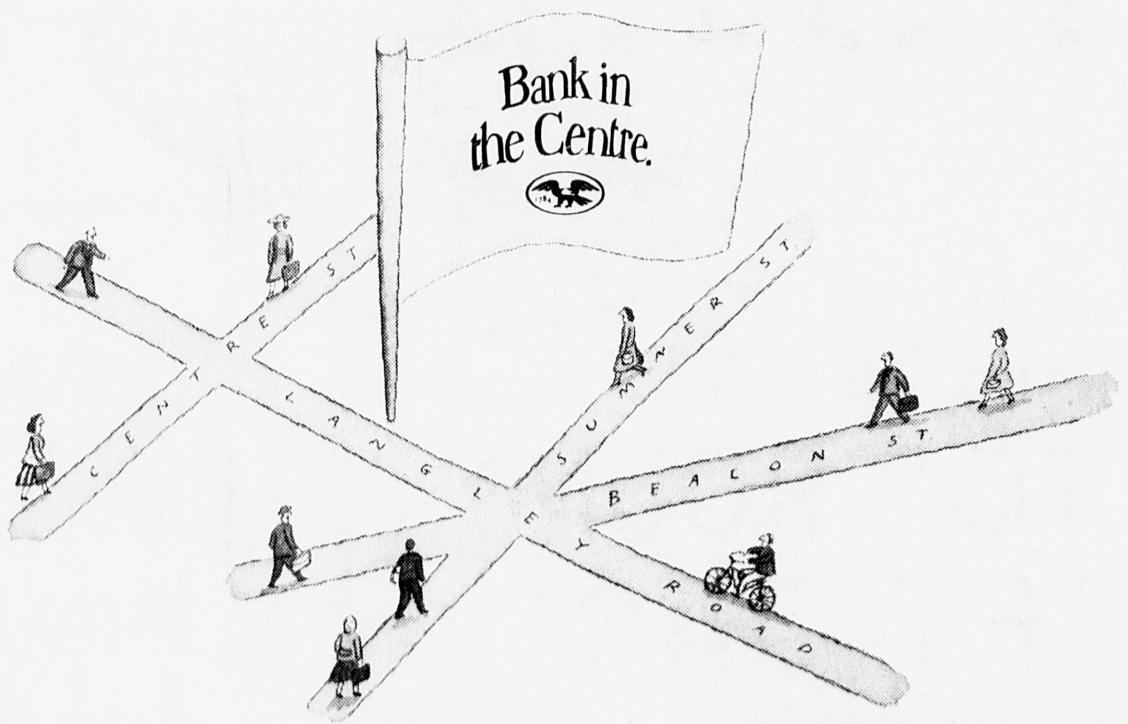

WALTHAM — Patriot's Trail Girl Scout Council recently announced the appointment of Barbara Donovan as executive director. She assumed this position on March 1.

Donovan most recently served as director of the New York Field Center of Girl Scouts of the U.S.A. Prior to that position she served as management consultant for GSUSA. She has also d as principal of a Chicago high school.

Donovan received an undergraduate degree from De Paul University and a Masters degree in Educational Administration from Salem State College. She is a member of the National Society of Fund Raising Executives, the National Association of Female Executives and the National Education Association.

The first challenges Donovan will face are to turn the Council's recent $2.5 million capital campaign success into an annual giving program. She will also concentrate efforts on membership extension and program expansion.

Home repair loans available

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

NEWTON — Spring has sprung and it is inevitable that a few boards in some homes have sprung loose as well.

Home repairs can be costly, but a federally funded agency in the city offers low-interest loans and home improvements grants to low- and middle-income homeowners.

"Homeowners are not aware of the money available for home improvements," says Paul A. Chmielinski, financial officer for the Newton Housing Rehabilitation Fund. "I don't think the word is out that we are here."

In the past four years, the agency has loaned or granted $1.1 million to the city's low- and moderate-income homeowners, he says.

Homeowners who wish to repair, paint or weatherize their homes can acquire a variety of low-interest loans and grants through the fund, according to Chmielinski. Depending on financial status, homeowners can obtain loans ranging from zero to 13 percent in interest, he says.

"Some people are not interested in borrowing money when they already have other monthly payments," he says. "We offer loan programs that enable homeowners to pay their bills while making home improvements."

The Forgivable Deferred Loan (FDL) program is available for homeowners who cannot afford to make payments immediately, he says. Homeowners can choose between three and 10-year deferment plans, he adds.

"These are for individuals who are able to pay taxes, able to pay the loan on their house, but cannot make the payments right away," he says.

The FDL benefits both the homeowner and the city, he says. The homeowner is able to improve his property, while the city upkeeps its housing stock and maintains historical buildings.

Improvement loans for landlords who own fewer than four units in which the majority of tenants are low-income also are available, he says.

Eligible owners of historical homes can obtain grants to pay for repairs that would maintain the historical character of the dwelling, he adds.

A painting loan program, which offers compensation for the cost of painting the exterior of a home, also is available, he says. Low-income homeowners receive a 50 percent rebate of the cost of painting, while those with moderate incomes are reimbursed 30 percent, he says. Homeowners who paint their own homes receive a 100 percent payback for materials, he adds.

In addition, there are funds for replacement of water pipes that are more than 40 years old, he says. Eligible homeowners who live on Rockland, Jewett, Boyd and Fayett streets should inquire about the program, since city crews are scheduled to replace water mains and resurface those streets this summer, he says.

The fund also provides weatherization programs, he says. Replacement of heating systems and weatherstripping of windows result in significant fuel savings for the homeowner, he adds.

"The amount owners pay to weatherize is compensated by the savings in fuel costs," he says.

He says his office assists homeowners every step of the way, from bidding specifications to approval of work.

Any low- or moderate-income Newton homeowners interested in the program should telephone the Newton Housing Rehabilitation Fund at 552-7140.

Maguire opts out of rep race

NEWTON — Wiltshire Road resident Dennis V. Maguire has decided not to enter the race to succeed State Rep. Joseph DeNucci (D — Newton, Waltham.)

Maguire, 28, said he collected more than 300 resident signatures on his nomination papers, but decided he did not have the "personal time" needed to run an effective campaign.

"I wanted to get out and personally meet as many people in the district as possible, but my business created a number of constraints on my personal time," he said. "I decided that if I couldn't devote myself 100 percent, a campaign would not be appropriate at this time."

In 1983, Maguire, who owns a heating and plumbing concern on Adams Street in Nonantum, ran a tough, but unsuccessful campaign for Ward 1 alderman against Ron Marini.

"I'm going to sit back and let the field adjust itself," said Maguire, who is a delegate to the upcoming Democratic State Convention. "I will be active in this election and I shall be a candidate at a future date. In my mind, there is no greater honor than public service."

Although he is not yet prepared to issue an endorsement in the 10th Middlesex District race, Maguire mentioned Alderman Bruce Carmichael, Democratic City Committee District Chairman Thomas Torchia and Waltham City Council President Joseph Alessandro as strong contenders.

Seniors squeezed

situated right off the kitchen area. Although a screen will eventually be placed between their side of the room and the kitchen, the nurses quarters are within hearing distance of anyone moving around in the kitchen.

"The nurses should be in rooms by themselves," said Albert Alexander, a frequent visitor to the center. "Before, they could talk to you confidentially. Now people walk by and get a drift of something (being said)."

The yoga class was cancelled because, said Rita Alexander, "Nobody feels like they want to come in and have everybody stare at them."

Further, there is not as much room for supplies. Although there is some shelf space, paper plates, forks and other utensils must be stored on a shelf above people's reach.

Yet, despite these inconveniences, the seniors are looking on the bright side of the situation.

"It will be even nicer in the long run," said Mary Gauvreau, "because people will be more together."

Rita noted that "There's certainly more socializing here now." And, motioning towards the tables and chairs where seniors are served daily hot lunches, she recalled that patrons used to have a chair for themselves, one for their pocketbooks and one for their coats. Now they are sitting right next to each other.

"Our goal," said Berkeley, "is to finance another Senior Center Drop-In Center funded by the group."

But until then, said Albert, "It'll serve the purpose."

More plaintiffs in GBPC suit

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Four years ago this week, Timothy C. Coogan, then-general counsel of the Greater Boston Police Council, allegedly walked into the Bank of Boston branch near his Tremont Street law office and opened a secret checking account in the GBPC's name.

The 38-year-old Sudbury lawyer identified himself as a "one-man corporation," signed the necessary documents and, over the next two years, allegedly funnelled more than $1.5 million into Account #540-3379.

Now, while a federal grand jury pursues it own investigation, 10 of the GBPC's more than 50 member communities have joined the civil suit aimed at retrieving the money that had been destined to pay for their share of the Boston Area Police Emergency Radio Newtork (BAPERN).

Norwood, Stoughton and Chelsea are the newest plaintiffs in the Middlesex Superior Court case. They join Newton, Watertown, Walpole, Lynn, Marblehead, Brookline and Beverly in sponsoring the legal action on the GBPC's behalf.

The council's member communities must act as plaintiffs in the case because the GBPC is an unincorporated association and, as such, cannot bring suit or be sued.

Attorneys representing the Newton-based police association say additional communities will join the legal battle shortly once their governing bodies endorse the move.

"Everybody is pulling together and cooperating very well in this thing," said James F.X. Dineen, a former U.S. attorney now working for Dwyer & Murray, the Boston law firm retained by the GBPC.

Attorney Thomas E. Dwyer, Jr., said the litigation is proceeding at the "snail's pace" typically associated with civil disputes.

The GBPC's suit charges Coogan with fraud, breach of contract, conflict of interest, breach of fiduciary trust and unlawful conversion.

He allegedly convinced the Newton financial officials who helped him administer GBPC funds to undertake a key accounting change that allowed him to open the unauthorized GBPC account on April 23, 1982.

Coogan's attorney and law partner, Kenneth Pollenz, contends his client earned the money through private telecommunications work allowed under a clause in his GBPC contract.

Pollenz also has filed a counterclaim seeking the $131,000 left in the Bank of Boston account when it was discovered last summer and has charged the city of Newton with violating the state's competitive bidding laws.

GBPC attorneys are convinced they can trace the missing money to real estate investments, mortgages, certificates of deposit and radio equipment purchases unrelated to GBPC projects.

Funds from 14 communities make up the bulk of the money and seven of those are now plaintiffs in the case, but none have publicly blamed Newton for the scandal.

The city acts as the GBPC's fiscal and purchasing agent, while Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn, the longtime GBPC chairman, first hired Coogan as a BC work-study student 15 years ago.

"Newton was victimized just like all the others," Dineen said.

He said every GBPC member sustained losses in the diversion scheme because some of the missing money included dues, equipment maintenance fees and funds for future expansion projects.

It is "a definite possibility" that many cities and towns may have to make up for the lost funds by paying extra until some financial resolution is reached, but Dineen is confident each will be reimbursed eventually.

"I think it seems pretty clear what happened ... The assets are there. It's just a question of staying on the trail and tracking it down," he added.

Dwyer said legal officials in the GBPC's victim communities have been "sympathetic" about Newton's predicament.

The city is "not responsible for the allegedly intentional criminal acts of an employee unless it's part of some kind of corporate philosophy the employee carried out.

"Everyone has suffered. Some have suffered greatly and some to lesser extents, but they all have suffered," he said.

Assistant City Solicitor Ouida Young, who is helping coordinate the case, agreed with Dwyer.

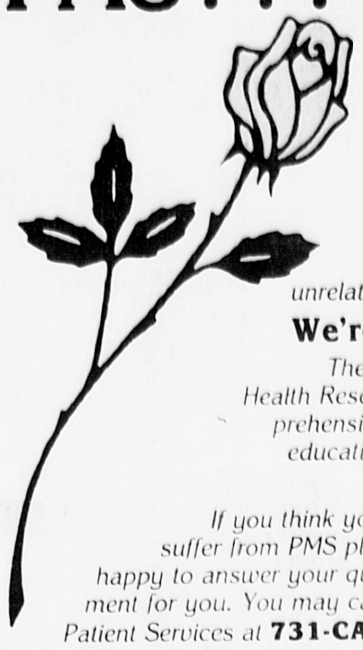

"What you have here is a situation where an individual engaged in deliberate criminal activity. I don't see why Newton would be held responsible.

"Newton didn't lose as much, perhaps, as other municipalities did, but he took Newton just like he took everyone else," she said.

Contract talks off for firefighters, city

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The firefighters' union and the city broke off contractual negotiations after more than four hours of collective bargaining Monday with no reported progress.

Newton Firefighters Association president Kevin McArdle declined to say if the union and the city were any closer to an agreement.

But his words hinted that the 22-month logjam has not been broken. "I don't want to say anything that would alienate anyone," said McArdle when asked if any progress has been made.

Firefighters make up the only municipal employee union that has not agreed to a new contract. They have been without a contractual agreement since 1984.

Monday's session was "on the record," meaning proposals mentioned can be discussed with the press. McArdle, however, said he wants to inform union members before reporting the negotiating issues to the public.

"I and the (union negotiating) committee owe the membership the right of being informed first on the status of negotiations or the lack of status," he said.

Richard Kelliher, the city's chief administrative officer, said negotiation meetings have been set for May 16 and May 19. He also declined to say whether Monday's session brought the union and the city closer to an agreement.

Asked if any progress had been made, Richard Ciccone, union negotiating chairman, would only say, "We're working on it."

Fire Chief Edward B. Reilly also declined to say if there was any specific progress. "When you sit down and talk, that's progress," he said without elaborating.

On April 2, the Newton Police Association (NPA) membership ratified a four-year contract containing a 23-percent raise and controversial drug testing language. Firefighters and police had joined to stage several informational pickets prior to that agreement.

Since then McArdle and Ciccone have criticized the language calling for drug testing officers at the discretion of the police chief.

The language makes it possible for the city to harass officers because it does not specifically define the circumstances under which the chief can ask a three-man committee for the right to demand a test, they have said.

McArdle and Ciccone have said they are not against the idea of drug testing, but want to make sure any drug language is fair both to the employer and the employee. They have not said whether the city is seeking drug language from firefighters.

Reilly has said he supports drug testing for his department because firefighting requires teamwork. "If you are crawling around a burning building in a totally dark smoke-filled room, you don't want the guy next to you, who could be in a position of saving your life, to be on drugs," he has said.

Plants help you breathe

A few well-appointed plants can add warmth and personality to your home. But their luxurious leaves may do more than just decorate — especially in the winter.

Recent research suggests that several types of leafy plants may cleanse indoor air of potentially dangerous chemicals.

As they breathe, plants remove carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide and free formaldehyde from the air, says Bill Wolverton, an environmental research scientist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration laboratory near Bay St. Louis, Miss. These gases, which can cause headaches, nausea and other problems, can come from a variety of seemingly innocent sources, such as a gas stove or a table.

Wolverton doesn't know how much of the three gases plants can remove or whether they absorb other indoor pollutants. "The project is in its infancy, but we know plants do something nice for the air," Wolverton says.

The idea that plants may freshen the air is not new. In their respiration process, plants absorb carbon dioxide and release oxygen. "Plants are the opposite of us," says Wolverton.

He discovered that plants have additional purifying powers while searching for ways to purify the air in manned space stations. During the first Skylab mission in 1973, scientists found 107 chemicals in the spacecraft, including carbon monoxide and nitrogen dioxide.

A spacecraft has a lot in common with an energy-effficient home. High oil prices have spurred homeowners to seal doors and windows, and builders to produce tighter and tighter houses. Meanwhile, manufactured-wood products and plastics have become more and more prevalent. "Anytime you seal a space and put in synthetics, you'll have a pollution problem," says Wolverton.

The tighter your house is sealed against the cold, the greater the dangers from the indoor air. "We're looking at plants for eventual use in energy-efficient homes that seal in pollutants," says Wolverton.

Recent studies have found that many toxic chemicals are more concentrated inside houses than outside. Formaldehyde, carbon monoxide and nitrogen dioxide, which Wolverton's plants absorbed, are among the most common. Formaldehyde, which can cause headaches and nausea in sensitive individuals and nasal cancer in rats, is found in many home-furnishing and building materials, including plywood, particleboard, fiberboard and some insulation. Carbon monoxide and nitrogen dioxide are released by the flames gas stoves and gas space heaters. Both can cause respiratory problems in high dosès.

Wolverton is testing the purifying power of various plants in a 3-cubic-foot plexiglass chamber. The plants are subjected to gas concentrations of 20 to 30 parts per million — 20 to 30 times higher than would be found in most homes. So far a dwarf banana plant, a low-light variety that grows to about 5 feet, has been the winner, reducing the concentration of all three gases to about 2 ppm in 24 hours.

The plants absorb small molecules of pollutants through tiny openings in their leaves, called stomata. Although Wolverton is not yet sure of the mechanism, plants may metabolize the chemicals in photosynthesis — the process in which plants use carbon dioxide, water and light to make carbohydrates.

A similar phenomenon makes it possible for aquatic plants to purify waste water. Their roots absorb hazardous chemicals, which the plants can't distinguish from nutrients. Wolverton and other scientists have been testing this method for several years as a possible solution to water problems in Southern California communities.

The true test of Wolverton's work with plant leaves will come when the experiments are performed in a house instead of the small test chamber. He hopes to do this in cooperation with the Environmental Protection Agency or home builders association.

Some scientists, including Lance Wallace, an EPA physicist who is a visiting scientist at the Harvard University School of Public Health, are anxious to find out whether plants fulfill their early promise.

Others, however, are skeptical. Thad Godish, director of Ball State University's Indoor Air Quality Research Laboratory, points out that conditions in a house are much different that those in a tiny chamber. "Formaldehyde is released continuously. There's no way plants can keep up," Godish says. He also says that plants can increase the release of formaldehyde by increasing the humidity in a home.

To prevent increased humidity, Wolverton recommends that anyone who wants to try plants for air freshening cover the bottom of the pot with about an inch of wash gravel or lava rocks to keep soil dry and discourage growth of allergy-causing mold or fungus. Based on his experiments in the tiny chamber, Wolverton says 10 to 20 plants may significantly cleanse indoor air.

In addition to the banana plant, other helpful house plants include the Chinese evergreen, spider plant, golden pothos and peperomia plants. One reason Wolverton feels comfortable recommending plants for indoor pollution problems is that they are already popular. "It seems like when I go to a nice restaurant, I can't get in for the plants," he says. "It may be my imagination, but I feel like I can breathe better."

The cost of remodeling

By Changing Times
The Kiplinger Magazine

Any homeowner thinking of remodeling probably suspects the job won't come cheap.

Marshall & Swift, a national construction-cost reporting service based in Los Angeles, proved that for Changing Times magazine.

Their national average cost for remodeling a kitchen was $16,194. The job included: new plumbing, sink and garbage disposal; dishwasher, refrigerator and gas rangetop with hood, oven, convection cooker and microwave; cabinets, countertops and backsplash; drywall, wallpaper and linoleum; electrical wiring and ceiling fixture; and extra insulation.

The national average cost for building a new bathroom was $5,602. This involved converting a walk-in closet to a bathroom. Features included: countertop and sink, with tri-view medicine cabinet; tub with overhead shower and sliding glass door; toilet; ceramic tile on floor, in tub area and partial coverage of walls elsewhere; light fixture, and combination exhaust fan and radiant heater.

The national average for adding a 15- by 25-foot room was $18,241. Specs for the project included: poured slab foundation with wire-mesh reinforcing; exterior wood bevel siding and composition-shingle roof; insulation; six double-hung windows; open doorway to the house and sliding patio door; electrical wiring for outlets, switches, ceiling fixtures and an outdoor fixture; a gas wall heater with thermostat and smoke detector; carpet; and paint.

Given the cost, the question for the homeowner becomes: How to pay for it?

— Remodeler financing: Many remodelers now offer to finance the deal themselves. The convenience of signing up on the spot is tempting, but you can probably find a lower interest rate and a longer term somewhere else.

There's another reason to be careful. Although the annual percentage rate (APR) must be disclosed before you commit yourself to any loan, remodelers sometimes express their rates initially as add-on interest. You may be unpleasantly surprised to find that the APR on such a loan is nearly twice as much as the add-on rate quoted.

— Second mortgages: Lenders typically offer second mortgages of up to 15 years for remodeling. Usually, the stated interest rate on a second mortgage is 1 to 2 percentage points above that on a conventional first mortgage. That would put such a loan today at around 11 12-12 percent, although the range is wide. Adjustable-rate versions start a little lower.

Discount points can make comparison difficult. It helps to know that on a 10-year fixed-rate remodeling loan at current rates, one discount point adds about one-quarter of a percent to the rate.

Counting the first and second mortgages together, generally you can borrow up to 80 percent of your home's appraised value. But you can get a bigger second mortgage if you find a lender who counts the value remodeling adds to the house.

The application process for a second mortgage is similar to that for a first. You won't get approval until your home is appraised, your credit checked and title insurance written. The turnaround time for approval is fairly short; you could close within two weeks of applying.

You'll also have to pay closing costs, which typically amount to $200 to $400. If the second mortgage is for less than $15,000, the lender may be satisfied with a drive-by appraisal and simple verification of existing title insurance and an in-file credit report. And, often, the lender will allow you to finance the closing costs as part of the loan.

— Federal Housing Administration loans: If you need to borrow a relatively small amount, look for a lender who offers FHA Title I home improvement loans. Loans of less than $2,500 under this program are considered personal loans. For larger amounts, a lien is placed on your house as security for the loan. The loan can be foreclosed if you default.

You can take out one of these loans for six months to 15 years in an amount up to $17,500. The typical rate right now is about 14 percent.

To find lenders making FHA loans in your area, write to Christopher Peterson, Director, Title I Loan Insurance Div., 451 Seventh St., S.W., Washington, DC 20410-8000, or call (202) 755-6880 to get that information.

— Home-equity loans: With rare exceptions, a home-equity credit line is a second mortgage by a different name, set up like a revolving line of credit. You can make as many withdrawals as you want over time — by check, phone or credit card, depending on the lender — up to your credit limit, again about 80 percent of your home's unencumbered value.

Each time you make a withdrawal you typically get five to 10 years to pay it back, but the amount becomes a second mortgage on your house in the meantime. The interest rate on many of these loans, currently about 10.5-11.5 percent, floats 1 or 2 percentage points above the New York prime rate.

Hand plane excels at smoothing surfaces

In this day and age of specialized power equipment, it's refreshing to know that a human-powered tool like the bench plane is still indispensable for homeowners and wood craftspeople. When properly sharpened, the hand plane excells at smoothing rough surfaces, trimming stock to exact size and cutting rounds and chamfers.

Time was when the hand plane was the means of shaping wood and every carpenter and cabinet maker had a chestful of planes with differently-shaped blades for everything from cutting mortises to molding the corner of a beam to dress it up a bit when house framing showed on the inside.

Nowadays though, woodworkers use planes mostly for smoothing and precise fitting rather than shaping and molding.

Modern hand planes are available in a wide variety of sizes and configurations. The most commonly-used types are the block, smoothing, jack, fore and jointer planes. These measure 6, 9, 14, 18, and 22 inches long respectively. The function of each overlaps its neighbors considerably, so you certainly don't need all of them in the average home craftsman's woodworking shop.

While the shapes vary slightly with size, modern steel woodworking planes all have the same parts mounted on a cast iron base or body. The bottom and sides are machined smooth and straight. The leading edge of the base is called the toe and is the end with a wooden knob for the left hand which guides the plane and applies pressure. Larger sizes have a wooden handle on the heel end shaped like the handle of a wood saw and used for the same purpose, to push the plane through a cutting stroke. Between the knob at the front and the handle, the plane iron or cutting blade is secured by a cap and an adjusting screw. It may also have a locking lever and an adjusting lever for moving the blade laterally on larger sizes.

For any plane to work well, its iron (blade) must be both sharp and straight. Since it literally shaves the wood, the blade needs to be razor sharp. And, because any unevenness in the edge will show up as ripples on the surface being planed, it must have an absolutely straight edge with no nicks.

You sharpen a plane iron on an oil stone and while some old hands can do this by hand, most of the rest of us should use a sharpening guide to assure a truly straight and sharp edge.

The basic plane operating techniques are the same for all types of hand planes. Begin by adjusting the iron and making practice cuts on a piece of scrap wood of the same type as the board you want to smooth.

Depth and evenness of the cut are determined by the distance of the edge from the plane's base and its side-to-side angle of projection. You make both adjustments by eye, sighting along the base of the plane. Then make a trial cut on your scrap wood to see if the plane cuts smoothly and makes an even shaving.

Begin each stroke by resting the toe of the tool flat at one end of the board you wish to smooth. Then, with the left hand (if you are right-handed), apply a bit more pressure on the knob than on the handle and begin the stroke. When you reach the far end of the board, relax the downward pressure on the knob slightly and complete the pass with a smooth motion directed by your right hand from the rear handle. Do not stop or start from the middle of the board and always work in an uphill direction of the wood grain.

Your Home

You may have treasures in your attic

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Were you planning to clean out the attic or basement and call the trashman for an extra pickup to prepare for a neater new year?

Before so much as throwing out a candy wrapper, take Helaine Fendelman's advice and stop. Mrs. Fendelman, who held her first tag sale 17 years ago when she and her husband discovered they had bought too much to fit into their new home, says you owe it to yourself to find out whether you're throwing away trash or treasure.

Her own passion for holding onto odd bits and pieces has led her to a satisfying career as a tag-sale planner, dealer, appraiser and author of books on collectibles.

Recently, Mrs. Fendelman coauthored a book to tell others how to evaluate what they have, find out what the things are worth, and how to dispose of some and insure and appraise those they decide to keep.

In "Money in Your Attic," she says, recycling your "junk" into someone else's home at a tag sale can lead to fun and profit.

Naturally, one of the first questions to ask is: What do I have? She has found a common error is to value the wrong things and overlook gold among the dross. For example, while old Christmas ornaments dating as late as the 1940s are collectible today, old books, encyclopedias and most old magazines are almost valueless.

Those who have been saving National Geographics and World Books have probably been wasting storage space. On the other hand, if you've saved old movie magazines, or the first issue of Antiques Magazine which she says is worth between $75 and $100, you are in a position to profit.

Many think that old children's toys are valuable — and they are. But generally they must be in mint condition, preferably in the original box, to garner good prices. Broken toys aren't wanted by most collectors and dealers and are not worth saving (unless they happen to be from the 17th or 18th century). Old china and jewelry are popular right now, as are linens, handmade lace textiles and even old clothing. But they have to be in good condition.

Many people have taken in the fact that old pieces have value, but like some vaccinations, they have taken it in too well. They are victims of what Mrs. Fendelman calls the "exactly-like-it" syndrome.

Consumers Union is 50 years old

By Lawrence Kilman
Associated Press writer

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y. — Every nook and cranny at the headquarters of Consumers Union is crowded with washing machines, wood stoves, exercycles, mattresses, toasters and other products.

Wires and gauges are everywhere. And amid this clutter, engineers armed with the most sensitive testing equipment, as well as some Rube Goldberg-like devices, determine the "best buys" that have made CU and its Consumer Reports magazine famous over 50 years.

Sometimes the tools for testing products are unusual. Take the "thumper," used to test the durability of mattresses. Two bowling ball halves, meant to replicate buttocks, are attached to a piston that pummels them into mattresses to simulate years of wear.

And sometimes these serious-minded tests are fun as well.

On one recent cold afternoon, the odor of barbecued chicken filled the halls. Technicians were testing a dozen gas grills, so consumers would have the results before summer cookouts.

It is here, 20 minutes from New York City, where Consumer Reports magazine comes to life. First published in May 1936, the magazine has its highest subscription level ever: about 3.4 million people who wouldn't think of buying a car, a vacuum cleaner, a television, a heater or even tea or coffee without first reading what Consumer Reports has to say.

The March issue was fairly typical of what readers have come to expect. It featured comparative product reports on toothpastes, toaster ovens, IBM-compatible home computers, child safety gates, compact cars and innerspring mattresses. It also features articles on the Minolta Maxxum 35mm camera and on what to do if your tax return is audited.

The April issue is always CU's most popular. It is the annual automobile issue.

The formula — testing products for the benefit of consumers — has worked for half a century.

Consumer Reports magazine's first issue was published when breakfast cereal cost 9 cents a box and stockings were 50 cents. That issue reported on cereals, stockings, Alka-Seltzer, milk, soap and toothbrushes. In the depressed economy of that year, few people needed the ratings for cars, refrigerators or other expensive goods that have since become the hallmark of the magazine's product testing reports.

Rhoda H. Karpatkin, executive director of Consumers Union, said the magazine's longevity is based in part on a simple but disturbing perception: many people do not trust businesses, advertising, government or advertising-backed media to provide them with the information they need to make educated buying choices.

Consumer Reports has no advertising and is not linked in any way to manufacturers. When Consumers Union buys products, it goes to the store and pays retail. The non-profit organization relies on subscriptions for most of its money.

"We want people to trust us, and we think many people do," Karpatkin said. "The reason they trust us is we don't take anything from business. We maintain an arm's length relationship with business. We're beholden only to consumers."

At its inception, the magazine strongly supported labor unions. The first issue contained an article titled "Consumers' Goods Makers Unfair To Labor" and included an "unfair list" for consumers who wanted to boycott the companies.

"The Best for Less"

Kassabian joins NU Hall of Fame

Any business or neighborhood worth its weight has the proverbial guy "who knows everyone."

At Northeastern University, which at least qualifies under the neighborhood heading, people turn that theory around to say: "We have the guy who everyone else knows."

They speak of none other than Kerkor "Koko" Kassabian, a man about to be enshrined in the Athletic Hal of Fame at Northeastern. Kassabian, for many moons the head trainer at Northeastern and currently the University's Curriculum Coordinator for that field, will join five other former Northeastern athletes in official induction ceremonies at Matthews Arena on Friday.

Kassabian, a long-time Newton resident, is proud of his accomplishments and rightfully so. He is also ready to take a walk down memory lane with some of his many Northeastern accomplices.

"We were really good at what we did, if I do say so myself," said Kassabian in ready retropsect. "We stitched up an Ivy Leaguer, a Princeton kid, once. The son of a gun came back to beat us, too."

The anectdotes are frutiful where Kassabian is concerned.

There was the time Herb Gallagher got thrown out of a baseball game at the University of Connecticut and was reinstated by the UConn athletic director; "That blew my managing career to hell," recalled Kassabian, who was waiting to spell the exiled Gallagher.

He remembers the time the hockey Huskies played Dartmouth at 11 o'clock at night at Hanover, N.H. "The train left with the team but no equipment," he explained.

He remembers post hockey game rendezvous at the Blue Moon, where "occasionally we would invited a BC (Boston College) Kid, but no that often."

Certainly, Kassabian has been nothing short of a fixture at Northeastern since his undergraduate days in the late 1940's. A guiding force in the general area of physical education and a substantial force behind the mushrooming athletic training field, Kassabian remains unimpressed with his own vulminous credentials.

"The program has come a long way and I've just sort of drifted with it," said the West Newbury native.

It has been through the rank and file that Kassabian, a member of the Athletic Trainers Association Hall of Fame, has risen to regional and national prominence.

Kassabian earned his reputation (that includes being a crack trainer and one of greater Huntington Avenue's legitimate characters) as a student manager of all trades for the football, hockey and baseball teams.

It was as an undergraduate water juggler that Kassabian first learned the intricacies of general corporeal maintenance. And as a "youngster" that he witnessed some of the great ones.

"I saw Harry Agganis, late for a game, climb the fence at Parsons Field three minutes before game time, change, and then go up and down the field," said Kassabian.

No matter what the playing surface, Kassabian always had a birds eye view of the situation, and along the way he developed some opinions on the relative elevation of the Husky athletes of his day.

"As a pure skater, Jimmy Bell (Waltham) was unquestionably the finest I ever saw at Northeastern," said Kassabian. "He was born ahead of his time. He should have been in the National Hockey League."

Kassabian also had his bearings on the all around category: "Tinker (John) Connelly of Newton was the best all-around athlete we've ever had," he said. "He never really looked like he was doing anything spectacular, but he always produced."

So far as the technicalities of training were concerned, Kassabian stands by the Northeastern system, then and today.

"The motto was if Northeastern was playing, then don't worry, they'll have the game covered with a trainer and a doctor." said Kassabian. "Doctor Lane and I had individual souture kits for treatment. We wre the first in the area to use them."

Kassabian was the head athletic trainer at Northeastern from 1953 to 1965, before absorbing the thrust of a burgeoing AT Curriculum as an associate professor of Health, Sport and Leisure Study at the UNiversity.

Along the way, Kassabian has lent his experience and expertise to a myriad of professional organizations, both public and private. He was an assistant trainer with the old Boston Olympics hockey team (1948-51), head trainer for the Lowell Giants football team (1967-68), the City of Newton Pop Warner (1970-76), and for Newton North High School (1970-71).

Kerkor Kassabian

So far as the rest of the "furitful" anectodes are concerned, inquiries should be directed to the Kassabian family Chair (person) of the Board, the former Elizabeth Bogoshian of Pawtucket, R.I., and board members Greg "Koko Junior" Kassabian, 26, of Richmond, Va., and Paul, 24, of Newton.

Burlingame fans 14 for Padres in South bow

NEWTON — With righthander Beau Burlingame striking out 14 batters and driving in a pair of runs on two doubles, the Padres downed the Cubs, 8-5, Saturday at Richardson Field in the opening game of the Newton South Little League. It was a matchup of last year's finalists.

The defending champion Cubs were held to four hits by Burlingame, who walked 10. Teammate Marc Bender had a double, two singles and two RBIs. The Cubs' Tom Cullen had a pair of hits. In other games, the Cardinals shaded the Orioles, 9-8, and the White Sox drubbed the Blue Jays, 14-7.

Newton Central

Josh Borus tossed a five-hitter and drove in two runs on three hits to pace the Giants in a 22-0 runaway over the Athletics in the Newton Central opener at Cabot Park. Other sluggers for the winners were shortstop Bill Cowens with four hits and four ribbies and Evan Malter with two safeties and four RBIs.

The Padres, who won the league crown the past two years under the Yankees banner, made an impressive debut in belting the Phillies, 12-4. Ed Piselli, Dave Wolman and Mike Rand had a pair of hits each, while Matt Bergstresser drove in three runs. Winning pitcher Rand allowed five hits.

Newton East

Dave Winickoff collected three hits and pitched in relief in the sixth inning to help the Dodgers down the Orioles, 8-3, in the Newton East opener at Newton Centre Little League Field on Sunday.

Winning pitcher Danny Finklestein did a good job in his first outing, allowing two hits. He also walked nine, five of those passes coming in the sixth.

Abruzzi, Battista in combined 2-hitter for Lancer nine, 5-2

WEYMOUTH — Freshman John Falanga launched a two-out, two-run single in the fourth, and Nick Abruzzi and Frank Battista combined on a two-hitter as Newton Catholic disposed of host Sacred Heart of Weymouth, 5-2, Saturday.

Pitching and hitting has been the story so far this year for the Lancers, and if the Newton nine can get the gloves in shape and clean up the defensive game, coach Don Dabenigno said things will fall into place.

Newton Catholic added to its skyrocketting unearned run totals, committing two errors which produced both Sacred Heart runs. In six games the Lancers have allowed 33 runs, but only nine of those have been earned.

"The pitching has been super, but they're not getting any support," Dabenigno said. "We're making stupid mistakes, and the people in the positions for the most part are all returners."

Down, 1-0, entering the fourth, Newton Catholic loaded the bases with no out and almost went down without anything to show for it. Mike Donnellan walked, Jeff Sherman was hit by a pitch, and Battista reached on an error to load them up, but two straight force outs at the plate started Dabenigno pacing the sidelines.

Falanga produced, singling to right for two runs and the Lancer lead, an advantage they would not give up.

Newton added two more in the fifth on a Battista two-run single to make it 4-1, and following Sacred Heart's second unearned run in the bottom of the fifth, Battista iced the match with a solo homer in the seventh.

Abruzzi started the game, pitching four innings of one-hit ball, before leaving in favor of Battista, who was credited with the win. Abruzzi struck out four, Battista five.

The summary:

NEWTON CATHOLIC(5)-Abruzzi 4-0, Donnellon 2-1, Sherman 3-1, Battista 4-2, Cullen 4-0, Taylor 4-0, J. Falanga 4-2, M. Falanga 3-0, Walsh 3-0. Tot. 31-6.

SACRED HEART(2)-O'Malley 2-0, McNiff 3-0, Deluca 3-0, Burke 3-1, Sheridan 3-0, Danley 3-0, McKinnon 3-0, Raymondi 2-0, Doyle 3-1. Tot. 25-2.

Mile relay team shines for North

ANDOVER — Newton North's mile relay team captured a pair of firsts at the Class A State Coaches Relays Saturday, catapulting the Tigers to a sixth place finish overall in the statewide meet held at Andover High School.

Peter Bourland, David Gates, Eric Cosentino, and Chris Rutan teamed to win both the 4x220 relay and the 4x440 relay for North.

Bourland got the Tigers off to a fine start in the 4x220 with a 22.6 leg, and Gates finished up just as quick, also pulling in with a 22.6 leg. Combined with steady performances from the middle men, North finished just nine tenths of a second off the school record,

Rutan began the 4x440, and he skated away to a big lead with a 51.3 leg. North coach Hank Van Putten said because of the early lead, his final three runners slacked off just a bit. Bourland finished in 51.6 and Gates finished in 52.9, but Van Putten said they are both capable of running the 440 in the high 49 second range. The team finished in 3:30.

Gates, Cosentino, and Bourland also combined in the triple jump as the Tigers took third overall with a 120-2 1/2 total. Bourland led the way with a 42-4, Gates was second with a 40-2, and Cosentino jumped 35-8.

Newton North took seventh in both the shot put and the javelin. Competing in the shot were Phil Vasiliadis, Dimitri Diachenko, and Rutan. Diachenko, Greg White, and Ganson Pollack threw the javelin.

The Tigers open the dual-meet season on Tuesday at home against Brockton at 3:15. Van Putten will bring around 15 competetors to Saturday's Rhode Island Interscholastic Meet to be held on the campus of U.R.I.

Newton South

Russell Kane qualified for the states in the long jump, and also ran his best time in the 4x200 as Newton South turned a few heads at the Class B Meet held at Reading High.

"Right now, Russ is the best athlete we have on the team," said South coach Chris Omeltchenko after Saturday's relays.

Kane anchored the 4x200 relay team and ran a 23.1 leg, his best time, and finished with a 19-2 in the long jump to qualify for the states.

Also running in the 4x200 were T.J. Rhone, Allen Joe, and David Cuthbert.

Rhone and Allen joined Kane in the long jump relay.

Lenny Nieberg and Matt Pickett both ran personal bests as South's four-mile relay placed seventh overall. Nieberg ran a 4:53.7 mile while Pickett finished a 4:49 mile to lead the way. Mark Haley turned in a 5:09 mile while Mike Silverstein ran a 4:47.4.

Robert Weiner anchored a sprint medley team with a 2:12 half-mile, his best time this spring. Ilir Topalli, Kane, and Joe also ran the race.

On Thursday in a dual meet against Lincoln-Sudbury, Kane beat indoor champion Stanley McConnell outside in the 200 to qualify for the states. It was just one of three wins for the junior, as Kane had a picnic. He won the 100 and long jump to go with the 200, and also nailed a third in the triple jump.

Rhone also shined in the L-S meet, winning and qualifying in the triple jump with a 38-10 1/2 effort. The sophomore also finished second in the 100 meter dash and needs to cut just six tenths of a second off his 11.9 time to qualify.

Silverstein won the two mile with a PR of 10:19 against Lincoln, and Len Nieberg won the mile in 5:00.

Newton South girls 5th in Class C triple jump

ANDOVER — Newton South girls had one team score, as the triple jump finished fifth at the State Coaches Relay Saturday in Class C at Andover High School. That came despite the fact that only one of the three Lions had competed in the event this spring.

Lisa Heck (30-11) and Sarah Lahey (30-5) qualified for the State Meet, while freshman Nicole Wagner rounded out the trio at 27-10. Ironically, Wagner is the only one of the three to have competed this season.

Lahey has been bothered by a knee problem and will only jump in the big meets. Heck appears to be back at full strength.

The shot put team just missed finishing in the money at seventh. Dede Hill and Michelle Scott each had personal bests, while Dede Theodore's 32-5½ was the fourth best throw of the day.

The 4x100 team seemed to have a good chance at placing, but a bad handoff finished that and the Lions wound up ninth.

Thursday, the Lions lost to Lincoln-Sudbury, 91-45. Field events proved to be the difference.

Junior Allyson DeRensis won the two-mile with a 13:33 PR. Julie Goldberg was first in the 200, second in the 100 and third in the long jump.

Nicole Wagner won the mile (6:11) and was second in the triple jump.

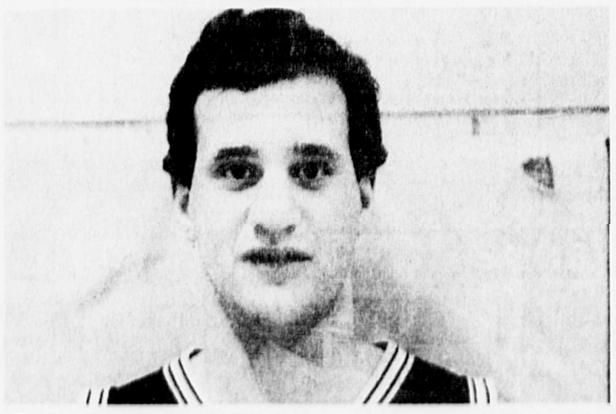

South also won the half-mile, as Hendi Crosby ran a 2:42. Michelle Fay picked up her first varsity points by finishing second in the 300 hurdles and third in the 100 hurdles.

Coven named Bay State soccer coach

Michael Coven of Chestnut Hill has been appointed the coach of the 1986 Bay State Games Women's Open Soccer team for the upcoming Bay State Finals, July 10-13, in Boston.

Previously, Coven coached the 1984 Coastal Boys Scholastic Soccer team which captured the coveted gold medal in a double overtime decision. He is currently the head coach of the men's soccer team at Brandeis University where he is in his 13th year of coaching. While coaching in the coastal region, Coven's Under 19 girls' team from Duxbury was the state champion for three straight years.

Tryouts for the Metropolitan Womens Open team will be held May 4 at 2 p.m. at Brandeis. All high school seniors, college-age players and older athletes are eligible to compete for the team, although all athletes must be preregistered prior to the May 4 tryout.

Ram hoopster

Jim Berrigan, a sophomore from Newton, played in 23 of 24 Framingham State College basketball games in helping the team achieve a 10-14 overall record last winter. The 6-3 forward scored 92 points and pulled down 48 rebounds.

Antonellis shares MVP trophy in DCL basktball

Odd as it may sound, the Dual County League has had five girls' basketball MVPs in the last two years. Last year, the indecisive DCL representatives chose three MVPs, this year they narrowed their choices down to two. Maybe next year the DCL will have just one.

Next year won't help Newton South's Katrina Antonellis. The senior forward has had to share the honors for the last two years running, despite almost singlehandedly leading the underdog Lions into the quarterfinals of the EMass Tourney this year. She also had a part in leading the '85-86 hoopsters into their first-ever state tournament. Unfortunately, she won't get another chance at the MVP.

Antonellis this season shares the award with Bedford's Kerry McGovern, who also had a piece of the trophy last season. Last year, McGovern and Antonellis cut the award with Concord-Carlisle's Kris D'Alleva, who has since graduated.

Locally, junior Cheryl Williams of Newton South copped her second DCL all-star nomination while Weston's Helen Kahn made the team.

Among the leaders in all-star representatives were league champion Boston Latin, Acton-Boxboro, Bedford, and Concord Carlisle, all with three girls on the list.

South placed two girls on the team while Weston, Lincoln-Sudbury, and Wayland all had one.

The locals:

Katrina Antonellis — Antonellis' stats speak for themselves. She is the school's all-time leading scorer with 1,436 points. She has averaged 20 points a game over her career and has hit for double figures in 69 of her 71 games. She has copped the team MVP award all four years and has shared the DCL trophy for the past two seasons. She has been a DCL All-Star for four years running.

"Basically, she owns every record at Newton South there is to own," says Lion coach Mark Aronson, Antonellis' number-one promoter. "I was lucky to have been able to coach her. Another 15 years could come by and I wouldn't probably get the opportunity again."

Even with Antonellis on the roster, South was expected to toil through a dreaded rebuilding year in '85-86. But not only did Antonellis fill in the holes created by several graduated seniors, she also inspired a talent-raw group of junior varsity promotees into the quarterfinals of the EMass Tournament.

"She ended up the number five scorer in the state," Aronson added, "and there wasn't a girl above her that had to do as much with such little offensive support."

To put it bluntly, Antonellis was the offense. Why, Aronson himself had a word for his Lion offense — katrina-ball.

As far as college goes, Antonellis is currently undecided but is receiving offers from Florida Tech. and St. Joseph's in Maine.

Newton South-Katerina Antonellis, Cheryl Williams.

Weston-Helen Kahn.

Bedford-Kerry McGovern, Kristen Dougherty, Jennifer Dyson.

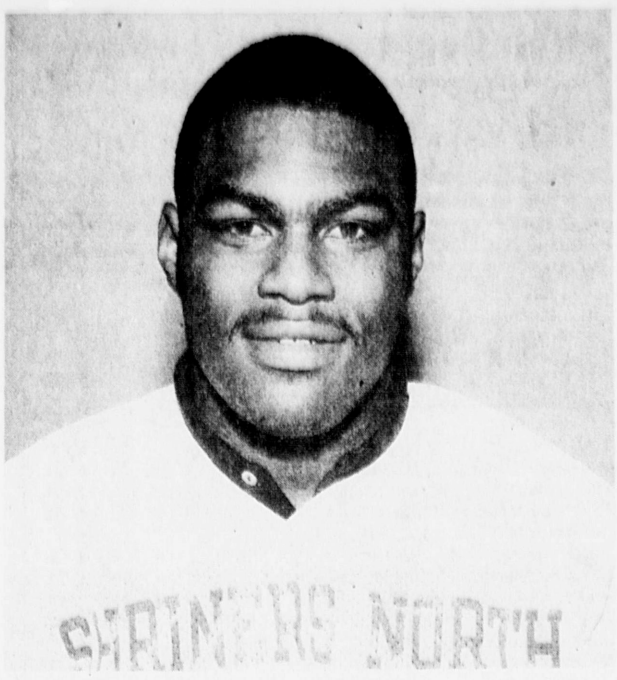

Acton-Boxboro-Toni Dalponte, Della Grallert, Rachel Nyberg.

Lincoln-Sudbury-Rachel Donaldson.

Wayland-Kristen Lorentzen.

Boston Latin-Suzanne Bavineau, Averill Roberts, Devonna Williams.

Concord-Carlisle-Heather Harris, Eileen Ferren.

Rollins to play in Shriners Classic

Four area gridders are among the 90 high school all-star athletes chosen for the 8th Annual Shriners High School Football Classic scheduled for Saturday, June 21, at Harvard Stadium. The major fund raiser helps support the 22 Shriners Hospitals for Crippled Children nationwide.

The local boys selected include running back Steve Giusti and tackle Paul Mayberry of Waltham, quarterback Mark Khozozian of Watertown and running back Kevin Rollins of Newton South.

Kickoff time is 4 p.m. and tickets are $4 at the gate and $3 for advance purchases. Team players from both the North and South squads are also selling tickets in their local communities to help make the game a success.

A parade with more than 500 Shriners from Massachusetts and Rhode Island will start the festivities at 3 p.m. Joining them to support their team members will be more than 300 cheerleaders froim Eastern Massachusetts. The halftime show will include a special Shriners drill team and the Boston Drum & Bugle Corps exhibition.

Phil Carlino of Randolph High will serve as head coach of the South squad and will be assisted by Paul McGovern of Waltham, Hank Cutting of Catholic Memorial, Joe Mason of Dorchester, Gerry Pastner of Assabet Valley and Ron St. George of East Bridgewater.

Bob Aylward will serve as head coach of the North squad and will be assisted by Bill Hamor of Beverly, Ed Nizwantowski of Peabody, Al Robichaud of Concord-Carlisle and Sandy Ruggles of North Middlesex Regional.

The rosters:

North nine fails to gain on fast-starting Everett

NEWTON — Newton North baseballers lost a close game in an unusual fashion at Ferguson Field on Thursday. The Tigers watched visiting Everett score three times in the first inning and then hang on for the win despite adding only one more run.

Even in the first, the Tigers almost escaped only one run down. The first marker scored on a single, stolen base and single. Later in the frame, a hard-hit double off the glove of first baseman Jim Giddon drove in the other two.

"They were hitting the ball well," said North coach Dick Walker.

The visitors added their other run in the second on a double and an error.

From that point on, the pitching and defense shut down Everett. Starter Steve Leonard went into the fourth being being lifted after back-to-back singles. That brought on Paul Fay, who saw the first hitter bunt safely, loaded the bases.

The next hitter lined one back to Fay, who alertly doubled the runner off second after nabbing the drive. A fielder's choice ended the inning without any scoring.

Everett's only other threat came in the fifth, with runners on second and third with one out. Andy Lyons came on and got out of it with two straight strikeouts.

Meanwhile, North was chipping away. In the first, a walk and stolen base by Aldo Calcagni, followed by Dave LeConti's single, made it 3-1. The Tigers added another in the second when George Maxcey singled in Evan Galanis (single).

A run in the fifth brought North within one, but the Tigers could have had more. Maxcey and Calcagni singled, and LeConti was hit by a pitch to load the bases. Ron Coppola drove in one run with a fielder's choice, as LeConti was forced at second. That left the tying run at third with one out, but Giddon and Lyons both struck out to end the inning.

North threatened again in the seventh, loading the bases with out out. But Giddon fouled off two straight squeeze attempts, the second on the third strike, and Lyons grounded out to end the game.

As has been the case several times this season, Walker saw a lot of good things in defeat.

"Andy Lyons did an outstanding job in relief," he said. "Defensively, we made some good plays when we needed to."

The coach was also happy with the way the top of the order is swinging the bat. Maxcey and Calcagni had two hits each, and LeConti is "showing he can handle the number three spot."

The summary:

EVERETT(4)-Mulas 4-2, LeCort 3-1, Dascoli 4-0, Weldon 4-1, Noonan 4-1, Rizzo 4-1, Capodilupo 2-1, King 3-2, Perillo 2-0. Tot. 30-9.

Tiger softballers drop decision to Somerville

NEWTON — Laura Kriesen fired a four-hitter as Somerville took a 7-1 victory over Newton North in softball action at North on Thursday. The hard-throwing lefty fanned eight, walked five and had a shutout until the seventh, when the Tigers pushed across a meaningless run.

The Highlanders got Kriesen all the runs she would need in the first, when they scored three times.

With two outs and a girl on first, Cherie Dellanno ripped a shot to straightaway center that went for four bases and a 2-0 lead. Linda Brown followed with a walk, took second on a wild pitch, and scored on Joan Cuntta's single to left.

Somerville got a second homer in the game from Susan Grunnis. She blasted a two-run shot to right in the top of the seventh.

Marie Farrar doubled home Joanne Tormey (walk) with Newton's only run. Farrar and Sharon Silva accounted for all the Tiger hits with two apiece.

The summary:

SOMERVILLE(7)-Mangan 4-1, Anzalone 2-1, Kriesen 5-1, Dellanno 3-1, Brown 3-0, Cuntta 4-1, Grunnins 4-2, Morani 2-0, Richman 1-0. Tot. 28-8.

MIDDLEBURY, Vt. — Middlebury College sophomore guard John Humphrey of Newton continues to earn post-season accolades. His latest honor was selection to the Vermont College Basketball Coaches All-Star Team.

Humphrey, a standout performer on the Panther basketball team all season, was named to the Vermont Coaches second team. Earlier this spring the 5-11 guard was also named to the National Association of Basketball Coaches New England District second team.

The former Newton North High hoopster is the son of Mrs. Susanne Humhprey of 34 Lombard St., Newton.

Defined benefit plan good for business people

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

What is a Keogh plan, and would you please explain the difference between a defined benefit and a defined contribution plan?
L.S., Newton

Dear L.S.:

A Keogh plan is a type of tax favored retirement account. Contributions to it are currently deductible, while earnings on the assets in the account compound free of any immediate tax.

If you have any earnings from self-employment, as distinguished from wages or investment income, you can have a Keogh plan. Thus, if you (or your spouse) run a sideline business, if you are a consultant or freelancer, you can claim Keogh tax benefits.

Defined Contribution Plans

The typical Keogh account is either a money purchase or profit sharing plan. With a money purchase Keogh, you are required to contribute a fixed percentage of your earnings each year. Technically, the maximum deductible contribution to such an arrangement is the lower of $30,000 or 25 percent of your "compensation," which is defined as net income minus the Keogh contribution. Consequently, in reality, the largest deductible contribution to a money purchase Keogh is the lower of $30,000 or 20 percent of the self-employment net income shown on your tax return (your Schedule C.)

With a profit sharing Keogh you have greater flexibility. You may contribute as little or as much as you wish, up to the lower of $30,000 or 15 percent of compensation — which works out to a maximum deductible contribution of 13.043 percent of the net self-employment earnings. To take full advantage of the Keogh tax break while retaining substantial discretion, you might consider a combined money purchase and profit sharing plan that will allow you to contribute and deduct 20 percent of net income.

Defined Benefit Plan

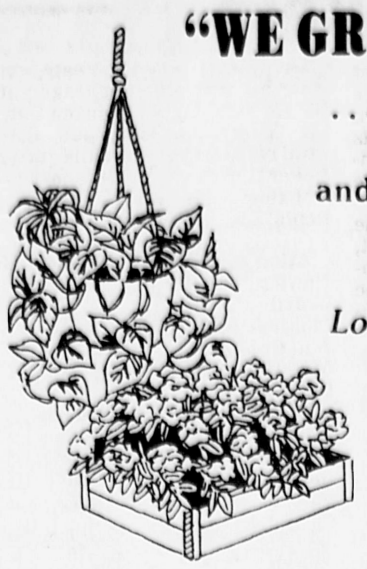

The money purchase and profit sharing Keogh are both defined contribution plans. However, it is possible to have a defined benefit Keogh. Under such a plan, an actuary determines the annual contribution necessary to fund a particular pension at retirement. The maximum annual benefit that can be funded is 100 percent of average annual compensation for your three highest earning years, up to $90,000. Although a defined benefit plan is somewhat more complicated and costly to maintain, it can be especially advantageous to a business person over age 50, who otherwise would not be able to secure substantial retirement income because of the defined contribution restrictions.

If you have employees, it is important to seek professional guidance because you will have to comply with various aspects of federal pension law relating to coverage, funding and vesting of benefits.

You can make a token contribution now and contribute the remaining funds next year. In fact, you have until the due date of your tax return (including extension) to make a contribution that will be deductible for 1986. But, your Keogh must be set up before the end of the year. (If you presently have a profit sharing Keogh and wish to switch to a money purchase or combination plan, you also must make your move by December 31st.)

Do not wait until next year, because you will merely have to pay taxes on the earnings you could have sheltered this year. A good technique used by one self-employed professional was to withdraw $6,000 from his savings in January, fund his Keogh account, then redeposit $500 per month to the savings. The following spring when he computes his tax return, he deposits the remaining amount, up to the maximum limit — if it is convenient. And yes, you can still have an IRA as well as a pension plan from an employer.

Peace Lecture in Newtonville

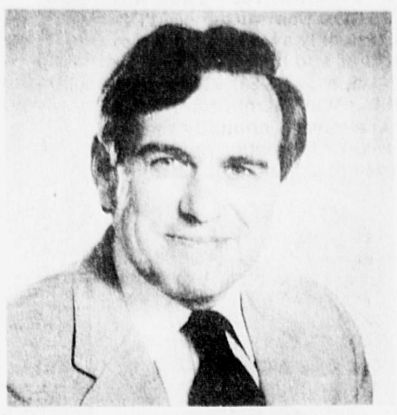

Around the world, on six contintents, Christian Science lexturers will this month focus some 700 talks on a single subject — peace. Participating in this something of a historic first, Michael A. West will next Tuesday point to the role each individual has in the pursuit of peace — not only on a global scale, but also within families and communities. He will explore the spiritual basis for the fulfillment of the Biblical promise, "on earth peace, good will toward man."

Explaining this special focus on peace, the Christian Science denomination's Board of Directors states:

The consequences of conflict can no longer be easily contained. Every individual today therefore — not just governments or professional conciliators and negotiators — has a stake in waging peace, in relegating war to the dark ages of human history.

Peace can no longer be considered a distant, utopian ideal. It must — and it can — be found a practical reality to humanity."

Topic: "Our Goal — Peace for all time."
Time: 8 p.m., Tuesday, May 6
Place: First Church of Christ, Scientist, Newton
391 Walnut Street
Newtonville

The scars of an abused child can stay with us all his life.

In any way you can think of, the effects of child abuse are devastating.

Over 2,000 of those abused children die.

And, for many of those who live, the effects of an abusive childhood may influence their entire lives. And ours.

Many teenage drug addicts and teenage prostitutes report being abused children. So do juvenile delinquents and adult criminals.

Because we pay to respond to those problems, we are all the victims of child abuse.

Yet child abuse can and must be prevented.

But we need your help to do it. We need money. We need more volunteers. Send us your check today, or write for our booklet.

And, remember, if we don't all start somewhere, we won't get anywhere.

National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse

Help us get to the heart of the problem.

Concertmaster to debut with the NSO

NEWTON — Malcolm Lowe, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make his Greater Boston soloist debut (outside the BSO) with the Newton Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Conductor Ronald Knudsen, on Sunday, May 4, 8 p.m., at Aquinas Junior College in Newton.

Honored as the NSO's Celebrated Artist this season, Lowe will perform the Brahms Violin Concerto. Also on the program are Mendelssohn's "Fingal's Cave" overture and Respighi's "Pines of Rome."

Lowe was appointed to the post of concertmaster of the BSO in the fall of 1984. The young Canadian violinist had previously scored many successes as a soloist in his native Canada, where he appeared with every major Canadian orchestra, including the Montreal Symphony under Charles Dutoit, the Toronto Symphony under Andrew Davis, and the National Arts Center Orchestra under Franco Mannino. In 1979, he was a top prize winner in the Montreal International Competition.

As the NSO's 1986 Celebrated Artist, Lowe will be conducting a Master Class for talented students of the violin, on Saturday, May 31, from 9:30 a.m. to noon, at the All Newton Music School, 321 Chestnut St., West Newton, under the auspices of the Newton Symphony Orchestra. Auditions for the Master Class will be held on May 17, at the United Parish of Auburndale, 64 Hancock Street, Newton. From left are Jeff Tye, Chaulk Ambulance Paramedic; Yvonne Landers, Lifeline assistant, Newton-Wellesley Hospital; 100th Lifeline subscriber Eleanor Horgan; Sharon Poller, Lifeline coordinator, Newton-Wellesley Hospital; and Steve L'Heureux, supervisor of the Newton Rescue.

'Lifeline' honors 100th subscriber

NEWTON — As Newton-Wellesley Hospital celebrates its centennial this year, its emergency response system, "Lifeline," is doing some toasting of its own. According to Lifeline coordinator, Sharon Poller, Lifeline recently honored its 100th subscriber. Lifeline is a personal emergency response system that connects homebound people to help 24 hours a day.

Seventy-nine-year-old Eleanor Horgan subscribes to the Lifeline service for obvious reasons. She suffers not only from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, but laryngeal cancer led to a tracheotomy that forces her to use a voice synthesizer, or microphone in order to talk.

The lifeline staff, consisting of Poller, her assistant, Yvonne Landers, and three paramedics from Chaulk Ambulance Service, recently visited Eleanor in her Newton apartment. They were greeted by an elegantly dressed, very tiny, silver-haired woman. She promptly said "Hello" to them through her voice synthesizer by raising a microphone device to her throat. Once inside her small, tidy livingroom; surrounded by antiques and numerous family photos, Eleanor was presented with a corsage of white orchids as a small congratulatory token for being Lifeline's 100th subscriber.

She explains she joined Lifeline because "It makes me feel more comfortable. It keeps me out of a nursing home." As frail as she appears, this is a woman who values her independence, and intends on keeping it. Living alone for the past 15 years, she struggles with the cumbersome voice synthesizer and serious respiratory problems that plague her life.

"Lifeline is designed for people with serious health problems who live at home," said Ed Moore, vice president of Professional Services. He added, "it also supports discharge planning because it allows physicians to discharge patients sooner and more comfortably so they won't have to go to nursing homes. The service has answered fifty emergency calls in the towns of Newton, Wellesley, Needham, Weston, Waltham, Norwood, Brookline, and West Roxbury. Twenty-eight of those calls came from subscribers who required hospital care, while the other 22 callers were assisted at home."

The Lifeline system consists of two parts. The first is called the Home Communicator, which is attached through the telephone to automatically dial the NWH emergency response center (ERC.) The ERC is located at Chaulk Ambulance Service's Dispatch Center in Natick.

The second part of the system is a small, wireless, remote button that can activate the Lifeline system from up to 200 feet away and be worn around the neck, wrist, or in a pocket.

When the ERC receives a signal for help, an emergency medical technician first tries to call the subscriber to determine the nature of the emergency. If there is no answer, a local ambulance is immediately sent to the subscriber's home. The ERC staff also calls a friend, neighbor, or relative who acts as a responder by meeting the ambulance and letting emergency personnel into the house. The Lifeline unit is leased to the subscriber at a cost of $18 per month.

"There are some very key people who deserve special thanks in helping to get Lifeline off the ground," said Poller. "Thanks to Chaulk Ambulance Service for monitoring the emergency response center as a community service. And a very special thanks to Captain Robert Mahoney and Sergeant Jack Kennedy of the Newton Police Department, as well as Steve L'Heureux; supervisor of the Newton Rescue, Lt. Whelan of the Wellesley P.D., Lt. Charles Rizzo of the Needham Fire Department, and Chief Thorburn of the Weston Fire Department."

SAVING BABIES
. . . TREATMENT BEFORE BIRTH

April Murphy's life was saved two months before she was born, at the threshold of treatment before birth.
Prenatal diagnosis showed that April inherited a rare enzyme disorder that had been fatal to her older sister. Mrs. Murphy was given massive doses of a vitamin needed to activate the enzyme.
The courage and hope of the Murphy family, and of the March of Dimes grantees who developed the treatment, were rewarded when April was born. She was the FIRST CHILD successfully treated in her mother's womb for this inherited birth defect.
You can help make miracles happen.

Newton Planning and Development Board
NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING FOR PROPOSED CHANGE TO THE NEWTON COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOACK GRANT PROGRAM FOR FISCAL YEAR 1986
Monday, 5 May 1986 — 9:00 pm
RM 209 — Newton City Hall
1000 Commonwealth Ave., Newton, MA

PROPOSED NEW FY86 PROGRAMS

1. Alternative Home, Inc. of Newton of 33 Nonantum Place, Newton, MA is requesting $150,000 of FY86 CDGB funds to renovate their residential facility at 459 Auburn Street in Newton.

Alternative Homes, Inc. currently operates an eight-bed community residence for mentally ill adults at 459 Auburn Street in Newton. Alternative Home, Inc. is proposing to upgrade the electrical and plumbing systems, replace the roof, renovate the bathrooms and kitchen, replace the heating system, install insulation, paint the exterior trim and a one story addition. Funding will also be provided for architectural fees and the temporary relocation of existing tenants.

2. Upper Falls Target Neighborhood — Oak Street (Needham Street to Chestnut Street) reconstruction — FY86 — $165,770.

This project was originally included in the FY86-88 Newton Community Development Plan for funding in FY88. Because of expected future budget reductions, this project is being proposed for funding in FY86 as a new project under the FY86 Community Development Block Grant budget, using currently available contingencies funds. This project includes reconstruction of the street pavement, drainage, sidewalks, and curbs on Oak Street from Needham to Chestnut Streets.

3. Nonantum Target Neighborhood — Hawthorn Gym Roof Reconstruction — FY86 — $38,337.

The original plans for this project called for the partial reconstruction of the roof over the basketball court at the Hawthorn Gym. It has since been determined that the entire roof needs to be replaced. As a result, an additional $15,000 is needed to replace the entire roof. The Community Development Program is proposing to increase current budget of $23,337 to $38,337, in order to accomodate these necessary repairs.

PROPOSED NEW FY86 HUMAN SERVICES PROGRAMS

The Human Services Contingencies budget currently has available $200 to fund new programs, such as those requested below. However, it is expected that approximately $7,600 will be available from captured funds of FY86 humans services programs who have indicated that they will not be utilizing their entire budget this fiscal year.

1. Nonantum Multi-Service Center is requesting $4,800 of FY86 human services funds to temporarily fund a director's position at the Nonantum Multi-Service Center.

2. Newton-Weston-Wellesley Committee (NWW) to Establish Residences for the Retarded is requesting $15,000 of FY86 or FY87 human services funds to continue their program entitled, "Community Access for Newton's Disabled".

3. Emerson After School Day Care Program, Inc. is requesting $2,000 of FY86 or FY87 human services funds for day care scholarships for low and moderate income persons.

Federal regulations require that when changes to the Newton Community Development Program are proposed, including additions, substantial changes or deletions of programs, the City must hold a public hearing prior to making recommendations concerning proposed changes.

Comments on this proposal may be submitted until 19 May 1986 to the Community Development Program, City Hall, 1000 Commonwealth Ave., Newton Centre, Newton, MA 02159.

Water rates hiked 52%

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Board of Aldermen Monday night boosted residents' sewer-water bills 52 percent for the next 2½ years, but only after a move to delay the hike barely failed.

The board voted 11 to 9 against Alderman Richard McGrath's call to recommit the proposed hike to the Public Facilities Committee for further deliberation.

Then they voted 15 to 7 in favor of the new rates, which city officials have said would increase from $250 to $350 annually the sewer-water bill of a typical family of four.

Higher Massachusetts Water Resouces Authority (MWRA) charges and the state's demand that communities collect enough to cover local sewer-water services led to the increase.

> 'They've got their hands so deep in our pockets I can feel them in my stockings.'
> Alderman Dominic Taglienti

Created last year, the MWRA has been charged with the multi-billion dollar cleanup of Boston Harbor, the rehabilitation of regional sewer lines and the development of a comprehensive water conservation plan.

The city has been planning for the higher local rates to reflect MWRA charges since October.

But McGrath said he wanted the rate hike sent back to Public Facilities so it could be considered as part of Mayor Theodore D. Mann's proposed reorganization of the city's sewer-water services.

Alderman Paul Coletti and William Shaevel spoke out strongly against the recommittal motion.

"I can't understand a two-week delay. If the alderman has something to say, he's had his opportunity," Coletti said of McGrath.

"Alderman McGrath's points are not new. I've heard them in committee," said Shaevel. "To hold this hostage is not to my mind the way to make public policy."

But McGrath said the vote on sewer-water rates is the last chance aldermen have to force Mann to make the utilties director answerable only to him. "Tonight is the night to do it," said McGrath.

Mann has accepted an aldermanic advisory resolution calling on the city to name a sewer-water director. But he has rejected a resolution advising him to make the director responsible only to the mayor.

As designed by Mann, the new director of utilities would be answerable first to the city's Public Works commissioner.

CHESTNUT HILL — How many times have you driven past the beautiful Georgian mansion on the corner of Park and Sargent streets, the one with the sign outside that reads "Swedenborg School of Religion," and wondered just what goes on inside there?

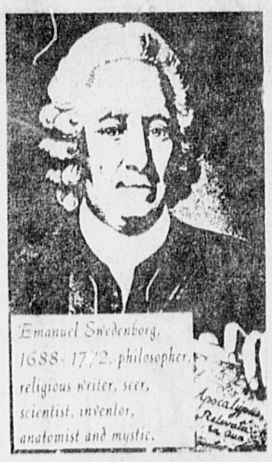

Since 1965, it has housed the teaching headquarters of a religion started by one of the true geniuses of the 18th century, a religion that now claims almost 100,000 devotees around the world, a religion that has affected the lives and works of such diverse personalities as John Wesley, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Edgar Allen Poe, Helen Keller and Johnny Appleseed.

Born in Stockholm, the son of a Lutheran minister, Swedenborg followed a variety of scientific, intellectual and philosophical pursuits, the products of which add up to an amazing array of accomplishments. A "renaissance man," regardless of the date of his birth, Swedenborg's intellect ranged freely among a number of disciplines and he ended up with a veritable smorgasbord of successes.

An assessor with the Swedish College of Mines, a bureaucratic position that assured his security, Swedenborg travelled widely, spoke six languages, read Hebrew and Greek and wrote dozens of books on science and religion, all in Latin.

He was the first to propound a nebular hypothesis of the creation of the solar system,

Battle weary

CHICAGO — In a world of pile drivers, back breakers and the dreaded "camel clutch," Ted Arcidi's formula for victory was all in the numbers.

Former Newton schoolteacher Arcidi, the 27-year-old "strongest man in the world," is 6 feet tall, weighs 285 pounds and holds the world record for bench-pressing 705 pounds.

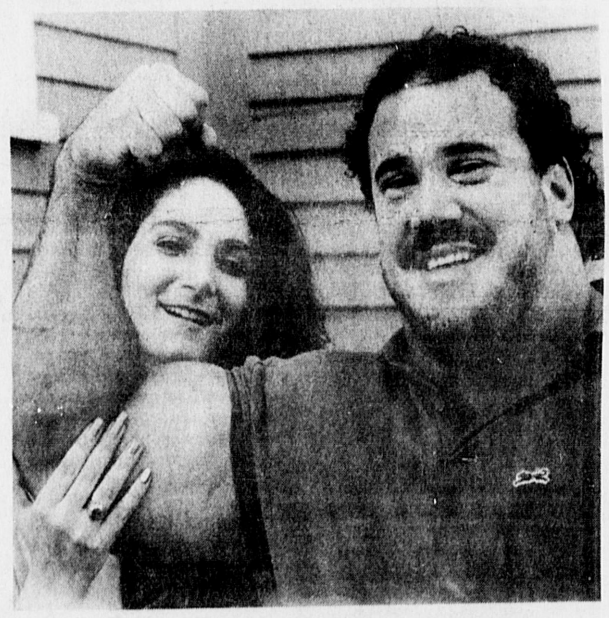

It is a powerful equation, one he had hoped to plug on William "The Refrigerator" Perry last Monday night when they and 18 other very large and rather crazy men stepped into the ring at The Rosement Horizon just outside Chicago.

They gathered there for one-third of that World Wrestling Federation (WWF) mega-event known as "WrestleMania 2" - specifically, the Battle Royal.

Arcidi, who was introduced to the crowd as being from Boston despite the fact that he lives on Walnut Place in Newtonville, was one of 20 combatants in the contest, in which wrestlers were eliminated by being tossed over the top rope and out of the ring.

For New Englanders, the event had the potential for sweet revenge - imagine all 305 blubbery pounds of the Chicago Bears' Fridge hoisted high in the air, twirled around relentessly and, finally, heaved to the concrete.

City backs the chief in zoning dispute

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON - Recently provided evidence has convinced Building Commissioner James W. Cameron that Police Chief William Quinn's 1900 Washington Street house is a legal three-family unit in a single family zone.

A September 1922 plumbing permit for the installation of a sink and of a vent pipe through the three-story building's roof as well as evidence provided by Quinn's legal counsel proved to Cameron that the building is a legal, nonconforming use, he said Tuesday afternoon.

The zoning ordinance for the Washington Street area took effect in December 1922, meaning Quinn's building is grandfathered for three apartments, the commissioner said.

Suspicion that the chief's building may have had one more apartment than allowed by zoning was aroused by two 1920s building permits and a 1934 permit to reconstruct the roof after a fire. Each said the house had two dwelling units, meaning the building should be grandfathered for two apartments only.

Other evidence includes old census papers and polling records that show the building had three apartments before zoning, Cameron said. Boston Edison, in addition, issued a statement saying three electric meters were installed when service was initiated, the commissioner said.

The complaint against Quinn's apartment was initiated by Newton resident and landlord Shirley Jaffe.

Firefighters' reps promise their union will 'hang tough'

NEWTON — Negotiations between the city and firefighters stalled again last week, just one day after police agreed to end their own 21-month long contract dispute, leaving firefighters alone in their struggle.

A spokesman for the city declined to comment, but Newton Firefighters Association president Kevin McArdle said talks "broke down". Both sides had agreed the session would be "off the record," meaning none of the issues raised [illegible] discussed publicly

Richard Kelliher, the city's chief administrative officer, said labor counsels for each side will set the next session date. The last round of talks lasted over three hours, he said.

Police and firefighters have been united in their contract struggle the past few months, during which they held six informational pickets. McArdle and Richard Ciccone, head of the firefighter negotiating team, said they would not recommend their union accept a drug testing policy like the one police approved.

"There are areas of the police drug language that bother me," McArdle said.

Cops finally settle

NEWTON — Police last week overwhelmingly ratified a four-year contract calling for a 23 percent raise and drug testing at the discretion of the police chief, ending a 21-month-old contract dispute that was marked by traffic-stopping pickets toward the end.

The 131-53 vote was announced by Newton Police Association President Lynda Glenn. "I have to thank the membership for looking at the wage package and language realistically," she said. "I am glad it is finally over."

The new contract is retroactive to July 1, 1984, and expires July 1, 1988. Officers will receive approximately $2200 in retroactive pay raises for 1984 and 1985 combined. By the end of the contract, the base salary of a partol officer will be $27,539.66, an approximate $4,500 raise over the life of the contract.

Despite the overwhelming approval, Glenn said many officers resent the drug testing language.

"It was a problem," she said. "There were a number of comments on drugs. We feel it is showing contempt for employees for forcing this on them even though there isn't a drug problem here. They really don't like the fact that there is no option for a first offender."

Some of the officers, Glenn said, let their opinion be known by making comments on the ballot.

MPA official complains of 'McCarthyism' in cops' pact

By Howard Altman

BOSTON — The call to subject police officers to drug testing is "akin to McCarthyism," according to a spokesman for the Massachusetts Police Association (MPA), the statewide police union.

"We are starting to get a lot of calls about drug testing," Edward Merrick, MPA legislative aid said. "The whole concept of drug testing is starting to smack of McCarthyism hysteria. It goes beyond 4th Amendment rights and a guy's rights as a human being. Police are not invulnerable against slipping and falling."

Merrick says while the MPA supports the concept of drug testing, he cautions that enforcement be reasonable and rational.

"I don't want a guy sitting next to me in a police car to be under the influence of drugs," he says. "But, if he is, I think we should help him if he is a first offender. If you take a guy to the wall and he still screws up, then I can sleep comfortably if he is dismissed."

something that is accepted almost as "a given" today. His discoveries founded the science of crystallography, the science of crystals.

He anticipated Einstein's theories of energy. He made the first sketch of a glider-type airplane. He wrote and published the first Swedish work on algebra. He made a music machine that was the forerunner of the phonograph. He conceived of the submarine. He designed a machine gun, and he marketed a usable fire extinguisher.

In his study of the human body, he discovered the functions of the motor areas of the brain and of the body's ductless glands. He discovered the circulation and uses of the cerebro-spinal fluid.

He was a sound economist, anticipating a system of credit we all take for granted today. In 1748, he sponsored legislation that anticipated our "modern method" of amortizing mortgages along with the payment of interest, one of the key elements in the present economic system.

He was a skilled book binder, a clock maker, an engraver; but he has come into the 20th century as a religious thinker and a seer.

Swedenborg's vision

At the age of 57, Swedenborg began to venture into a nether world he called "the world of spirits," and he continued to do so until he died at the age of 84. He claimed he entered into the spiritual world every couple of weeks, sometimes daily and sometimes several times a day. What he witnessed in that world constitutes the bulk of the religious teachings that form the basis of the Swedenborgian Church.

Of his sorties into spiritualism, Swedenborg said, "The manifestation of the Lord and intromission into the spiritual world surpass all miracles. This has not been granted to anyone since the creation as it has been to me .... By this means it was granted to me to see the wonderful things of heaven, to be together with the angels like one of them, and, at the same time, to imbibe truths in light and thus to see and teach them."

Examples of the special "sight" Swedenborg gained from his experiences in the "world of spirits" are many. At a party one day in Sweden, he suddenly announced that "At this very hour, the Emperor Peter III of Russia has died in prison." It was true.

While in England in 1759, he suddenly declared, pale and alarmed, that a catastrophic fire had broken out in Stockholm, 300 miles away. After an agitated couple of hours, he announced joyfully that the fire had been extinguished three doors away from his own house. He was right again.

Attempting to get together with clergyman John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, Swedenborg invited him to Sweden. When Wesley wrote back that he would visit Swedenborg after a six-month speaking tour he had planned, the Swedish spiritualist responded that Wesley would be too late. Swedenborg predicted the precise day of his own death. On March 29, 1772, he entered the "world of spirits," never to return.

Swedenborg's followers

The house at the corner of Park and Sargent streets is one of two teaching centers for the followers of Swedenborg. They come to it from all over the world to prepare themselves for a life of spreading his message.

According to Dr. Mary Kay Klein, who was inaugurated on March 15 as the 11th president of the school, the focus of the curriculum is a broad one that includes Swedenborg's writings as "the third testament," standing alongside the Old and New Testaments.

Her goals, as enunciated during her inaugural address, are high. "Our students, as future ministers in a 21st century Christian denomination, must be educated to be facilitators of the process of regeneration, and to be those whose inspiration leads others to receiving the Love and Wisdom of the Lord.

"In order to do this, these ministers must be educated in many areas. They may be called upon, in the course of their service to the Lord, to be everything from pastoral counselors to executive managers, from barefooted gurus to the people in charge of leaf-raking."

The Church of the New Jerusalam, another name for the Swedenborgian Church, is now scattered throughout the United States and Canada, England, Africa, Australia and New Zealand. Dr. Klein says she sees room for growth in the new future because "a lot of the ideas (of the church) are compatible with what people are looking for these days."

While the future might look bright to Swedenborgians, their teacher has already held considerable sway in the spiritual development of the United States. America's first philosophers, Transcendentalists like Ralph Waldo Emerson, were greatly impressed with Swedenborg's concept of an unseen spiritual world residing inside the realm of appearances. Emerson's essay, "Nature," published anonymously, was praised as a piece of Swedenborgian analysis. Later, he acknowleged his debt to the Swedish seer with "Swedenborg, or the Mystic."

But two of the most influential early followers of Swedenborg in America were Helen Keller and Johnny Appleseed.

Keller came across Swedenborg's teachings at the age of 13, through the influence of Alexander Graham Bell, who was then working with the deaf. When she encountered a braille version of Swedenborg's "Heaven and Hell," she stated, "My heart gave a joyous leap." Later she wrote, "It would be such a joy to me if I might be the instrument of bringing Swedenborg to a world that is spiritually deaf and blind. His teaching is a happy rest from the noisy insanity of the outer world."

Johnny Appleseed, born John Chapman in Leominster, Mass., in 1774, is well known for his seed-planting mission, which led him all over this new country and left fruit orchards in his wake. But his real mission, as it turns out, was to spread the teachings of Swedenborg. The man who once walked from Iowa to Philadelphia to attend a Swedenborgian church convention acted as a travelling library, leaving Swedenborg's writings with settlers on one trip and replacing them with others on his return.

A shining example of Swedenborg's contention that faith must be manifested in good works, Johnny Appleseed told the early settlers that "Praying is doing — giving the best each of us can, however we can. In other words, choring is like praying."

Now, the seeds that Johnny Appleseed sowed in his wanderings are being nurtured in that beautiful Georgian home you have always wondered about on the corner of Park and Sargent streets. From there, with the help of Dr. Klein and her staff, the vision of one of the shining lights of the "Age of Enlightenment" will radiate into the 21st century.

Wild turkey

"Another turkey in West Newton. That's all we need," was the comment of one passerby when he was told the crowd gathered on Border Street was staring up at a wild turkey, treed after a quick tour of West Newton. "It came here from the Berkshires," said the Animal Control officer who rushed to the scene and left quietly when he realized there was nothing to be done. Yellow Cab employees, gathered in front of the garage after a shift change, were the first to notice the lost bird. "It was coming down Border Street, about 12 feet off the ground and working very hard," one cabbie said. "Its wingspan must be four feet!" After some name calling, some hoots and some horn honking, to which the bird responded with a healthy "gobble, gobble," the misguided but majestic creature sailed off into the sunset, never to return.

Shortened school days will remain unchanged

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The School Committee Monday night approved continuation of the elementary schools' Tuesday and Thursday early dismissal time of 1 p.m., as recommended by the administration.

The committee voted 5-3 in favor of maintaining the present schedule. School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile, Sydra Schnipper and Sally Rizzo cast the opposing votes.

Tuesday and Thursday afternoons are used by teachers for professional development and curriculum planning and several members said the activities are crucial to maintain the high quality of education in Newton.

"These kinds of activities are very valuable to our teachers," member Gerald Bazer said. "But more important is how these activities ultimately benefit the youngsters."

Member Lynne Sullivan said it is sometimes "wiser not to tamper with a good thing."

"If we vote to change the schedule, I think we would be changing much more than hours," she said. "We would be disturbing a very well-balanced dynamic. We would lose our sense of direction and identity if we tamper with this."

Sullivan said there is a shortage of time students spend in the classroom, but the best way to amend that is to start the school days 15 minutes earlier.

"I'm distressed the administration opposes starting the day earlier. I would like to pursue this option more vigorously because I think this is the best place to ease in extra time," she said.

The early dismissal schedule has been pending before the committee for months, with arguments from both parents and teachers.

Angier Elementary School teacher Dick Hanelin said he thanks the committee for understanding the importance of Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

> 'We would lose our sense of direction and identity if we tamper with this.'
> Lynne Sullivan

"I applaud them for their thoughtfulness and understanding of what is needed to forge ahead as leaders in the education community," he said. "I anticipated that, when the School Committee thought of how important this is to the children in Newton, they would come to the conclusion that the schedule needs to be maintained."

Many parents urged the committee to consider the day care problems the early dismissal schedule presents for two-career and single-parent families.

While several members acknowledge day care is a problem, they said the argument was not compelling enough.

"I have spoken very strongly about the issue of day care, but it is not a strong enough reason for me to support a change in the schedule," Rizzo said. "It seems to me this problem requires a partnership between the city government and community. I recommend a city commission be formed to look at the issue of day care because it is not just a school problem."

The committee agreed to discuss Rizzo's recommendation at the next meeting.

The committee also voted 7-1 to authorize the administration to develop plans for possibly expanding the kindergarten school day. Angela Nielsen cast the sole opposing vote.

"I'm not convinced kids that age need to be in school longer hours," she said.

School Committee mulls pending cuts

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — School Committee members said they are disappointed — but not surprised — by the estimated $1.18 million cut from their $46.4 million fiscal 1987 budget.

While most committee members estimated the cuts to be in the area of $800,000, Assistant Superintendent of Operations and Planning Vincent Silluzio said his figures suggest the cuts are larger.

Mayor Theodore Mann said the School Committee's decision to use state professional development grant money for staff salary increases was an "ill-advised action."

During his city budget presentation to the Board of Aldermen last week, the mayor devoted half of the time to explain why he thought the school budget was out of line.

Several School Committee members attribute a majority of the budget increases to inflation and salary increases, which they said are factors beyond their control.

"We have to be competitive with other school systems, as far as our teacher salaries are concerned, if we want to attract and keep a high quality staff," member Angela Nielsen said.

Mann said enrollment is down 20 percent since 1982, yet per-pupil costs have increased by 50 percent. In five years, 11 schools have been closed, resulting in a $14 million net saving for the department, yet the department's total costs have increased by 21 percent, he said.

"There are various ways to handle numbers," member Lynne Sullivan said. "You can present them one way and they can look good, or you can present them another way and they can look very bad. I think the cut was shortsighted and ill advised. I'm disappointed with the cuts because it is my feeling that we presented a very tight budget."

According to Nielsen, the proposed budget would have been much higher if the department had not saved the $14 million by closing some schools. Furthermore, since 1978, the department has cut 400 teaching positions, she said.

"The city hasn't done anything like that. We've done our work and we've made some tough decisions in the past," she said.

Sullivan said the proposed budget is necessary to "maintain a first-string school system."

"I think the committee acted quite responsibly. This is the first time the mayor has really cut our budget and I'm a little disheartened because we spent so much time reviewing it," she said.

Memeber Jennifer Huntington said this year's budget included equipment expenses that have been neglected for several years.

"It's time some of the worn-out equipment and supplies get replaced and if we don't do it soon, the costs will increase even more," she said.

Member Gerald Bazer said he hopes the aldermen will not make any additional cuts. The mayor's reference to declining enrollment statistics are "fallacious," he added.

"This doesn't necessarily mean there should be a decrease in the budget. The numbers may go down, but each child remaining has greater needs and more societal problems than they had five or six years ago," he said.

Computers and drug and alcohol education are two areas that schools didn't have to consider years ago, he said.

The aldermen's Program and Planning and Finance committees plan to review the school budget this month before a final vote by the full board is taken May 15.

Cleared of hit-and-run death charges

BOSTON — A 21-year-old Newton resident charged with running over a man and then dragging his body for seven miles has been cleared of all but two charges in connection with the 1984 death.

Andrew Fruman, was cleared last week in Suffolk Superior Court of vehicular homicide and driving to endanger charges resulting from the hit-and-run death of Bernard Clougherty, 42, of Dorchester.

According to prosecutors, Clougherty was struck about 3 a.m. on Feb. 26, 1984 at the corner of Essex Street and Harrison Avenue in Boston's Chinatown section. His body was then dragged more than seven miles to Cambridge after becoming stuck in the suspension of a red Firebird driven by Fruman.

Fruman, who was 18 at the time of the incident, was found guilty by Judge John T. Irwin of leaving the scene of an accident after causing personal injury and driving without a license.

On Monday, he was found innocent of manslaughter charges, driving under the influence of marijuana and failing to use caution at an intersection.

Fruman faces a minimum sentence of two months and a maximum of two years at a Massachusetts House of Correction for leaving the scene of an accident and a $25 fine for driving without a license.

While disappointed with the outcome, Asst. District Attorney John Mahoney, who prosecuted Fruman's case, said the judge's decision was stictly by the books.

"We tried the case as fairly as possible," Mahoney said. "His verdict reflects what issues were proven by the commonwealth and what doubts he had."

A passenger in Fruman's car on the night of Feb. 26, 1984 testified that both she and Fruman were aware a body was under the vehicle en route to Cambridge.

Arrest made for raping, beating woman

NEWTON — Timothy S. Houston, 21, of Newton, was arrested Thursday night for allegedly raping and beating a Newtonville woman, police said.

The alleged rape occurred at 5:15 p.m. on Farwell Street and the suspect was arrested approximately a half hour later at a different location, police said.

According to police the victim knew the suspect. Houston knocked on the front door of the victim's house, forced his way in and allegedly beat and raped the woman, police said. The victim was taken to Newton-Wellesley Hospital for treatment. The extent of her injuries are unknown.

Houston pleaded not guilty in district court Friday to a charge of rape, according to court records. Judge Monte G. Basbas set the defendant's bail at $25,000 surety or $2,500 cash bail. The defendant's bail was reduced to $10,000 surety and $1,000 cash bail after review by the Middlesex Superior Court later Friday afternoon, according to Assistant District Attorney Adrianne Lynch.

Houston waived his right to a first-instance jury trial of six. The case was continued to April 10.

City will sell bonds for sewer project

NEWTON — The Board of Aldermen has authorized the city to sell bonds to pay for its $9.1 million sewer project. Once officials secure 46 easements near the Charles River, the long-awaited project can begin.

Aldermen voted unanimously Monday night to give the city the authority to raise the necessary funds through municipal bonds.

The $9.1 million construction is phase one of an estimated $16.1 million project designed to solve Newton's sewer problems.

It will be the city's most expensive undertaking since the building of Newton North High School in the early 1970s, Department of Public Works (DPW) Commissioner James L. Hickey has said.

Among other things, phase one calls for expanding the capacity of two sewer lines that extend from Quinobequin Road in Waban to the Charles River Golf Course in Newton Highlands.

Limited capacity of the existing lines causes backups and overflows that periodically dump raw sewage into the Charles River and residential property.

Before construction can actually begin, the city must gain 46 easements or land rights to lay pipes. The DPW is now negotiating with residents on that issue.

The first phase also includes constructing a new pumping station at Elliot Street.

Hickey has estimated the actual work could begin next spring. Planning for the sewer project started in 1976.

The city could receive as much as 70 percent state reimbursement for phase one, Hickey has said.

Police to enforce response to census

NEWTON — Residents who have not returned their 1985 city census forms can expect the men in blue to knock on their doors in the next week, Election Commission Executive Secretary Alan Licarie says.

"The police will be going to those households that have not replied to the annual city census," Licarie says. "The Election Commission has already mailed two census forms and a post card. We will also be trying to contact them by phone prior to sending the police out to get the information."

Licarie stresses the importance of answering all data on the forms and says anyone who has yet to turn in a form can call his office at 552-7045. That will eliminate the need to send out an officer to the home, Licarie says.

Police will visit homes beginning in Newton Centre and the Highlands. After that, they will visit Newtonville, West Newton, Auburndale, Upper and Lower Falls and Waban.

According to Licarie, census forms have been returned from 95 percent of the city's 30,000 households, leaving about 1,600 forms still outstanding. The census forms were sent out Jan. 1.

"It is an unecessary expense to the city to get this information that is required by law," Licarie said.

"We will have to pay the officers at the hourly rate they have just agreed to," he says. "The police can do approximately 3.5 to four forms per hour."

Licarie said some people may be balking about answering questions concerning racial and ethnic background.

"By and large," he says, "the racial census has been going very well. We are getting information back, but with any census of this magnitude, 30,000 households, you are bound to have some problems."

North wins fourth place in decathalon

NEWTON — The Newton North Academic Decathalon team placed fourth among 41 schools competing in national competition Thursday in Los Angeles. The team came home with eight medals.

Jonathan Greenburg won a gold medal in the essay category and a silver medal in economics. Included in Mark Chao's three medals were a silver for economics, a bronze for fine arts and a silver for language and literature.

Maeve O'Connor and Allison Draper also won silver medals in the language and literature category and Sarah Idelson won the bronze medal.

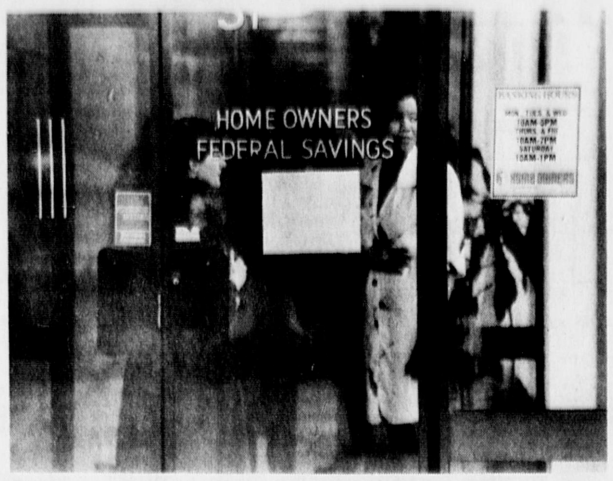

Texas, California and Ohio won first, second and third places, respectively.

The Newton North team won the state championship in February, winning about 80 medals.

No more air rights talk for commission

NEWTON — The Urban Design and Beautification Commission (UDBC) will no longer have responsibility for discussing future air rights development in the Garden City. The Board of Aldermen Monday night voted 15-7 to delete the words "air rights construction" from the ordinance creating the commission.

Proponents of the petition, introduced by Aldermen Polly Bryson and Richard McGrath, argued that discussion of air rights development by the UDBC "would only serve to make it a foregone conclusion that it will happen," Bryson said. In addition, others said they voted for the deletion because only a legislative body responsible to the voters should have authority for setting up such development guidelines.

Red dye foils theft

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A lone gunman dressed like a cowboy held up a Route 9 bank Monday afternoon, but was forced to drop his bag of loot when a red dye bomb inside it exploded.

Police said the would-be robber wore a white cowboy-style hat, Texas tie, long white coat and tan cowboy boots when he walked into the Homeowner Federal Savings Bank, 31 Boylston St., at about 3 p.m. Monday.

Later the same day, according to police, the suspect successfully robbed the Wollaston Credit Union in Quincy of $3,807. Witnesses at the scene said the suspect's white coat was stained with red dye.

In Newton, the suspect produced a plastic bag and a weapon with a long black barrel, possibly a sawed-off shotgun, then ordered a female bank teller to fill the bag with money.

Police said the hold-up attempt was foiled by the alert teller, who handed the robber "a baited package" with a dye bomb in it. The package exploded only seconds after he calmly walked out of the bank.

The bag, which contained approximately $1,500, was recovered by police in the middle of a driveway between the bank and General Cinema's Chestnut Hill movie theater.

A cloud of red smoke blew across the roadway when the dye bomb erupted in the robber's hand, according to a 45-year-old Chestnut Hill resident driving west on Route 9 at the time of the incident.

Police said the suspect dropped the smoking bag and walked quickly away from the scene toward the nearby Star Market on the Brookline line.

Although the man was reportedly seen in a parking garage behind The Steak Place, which is directly across Route 9 from the bank, a search of the area by both uniformed and plainclothes officers proved fruitless.

The suspect is described as a black male, 35 to 40 years old, who is six feet, three inches tall, and weighs about 220 pounds.

Police were alerted to the robbery by an ADT alarm activated within the bank and responded to the scene in force. Units from Brookline also helped with the search.

Lt. James O'Donnell said film from the bank's videotape security system is being processed and should provide police with enough information to apprehend the culprit.

"If he's doing it in one place, the chances are he's going to do it some place else in the future. The film will give us a better shot at getting him eventually," he added.

Capt. Walter Drew and Det. Sgt. Arthur Fryar are handling the investigation.

Monday's incident was the second time this year a bank along the Route 9 strip in Chestnut Hill was robbed at gunpoint. Two months ago, a gang made off with thousands of dollars from the Pioneer Financial Savings Bank at 210 Boylston St.

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY
INCLUSIONS AND CAT'S EYES
One important characteristic of any gem is its clarity. This term refers to the presence or absence of flaws called "inclusions." Inclusions are the result of imperfections caused when the gem was created or crystallized by nature. "Cat's eye" actually is a term for the effect of inclusions and light rather than the name of a specific gem. Numerous fibrous inclusions reflect the light, making the stone appear to have a satiny surface. It gives the stone a silky sheen called "chatoyancy." It is from the French word "chatoyer," meaning to shine like a cat's eye. When needle-like inclusions line up in such a way as to reflect the light in a single line, the effect is similar to the slit in a cat's eye.
When you buy diamonds it is almost impossible to buy a flawless stone. But to the unknowing eye, these flaws are not even visible. So when you're ready to purchase a diamond for an engagement ring come to CAROL "THE GOLD LADY". We have a stunning selection of diamond rings in various styles, shapes and weights. You'll always find something to please the eye at 109 Dalby St., Newton, Tues, Wed, Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. 'til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

Kudos for rehab of Ethics Comm.

The Newton Graphic congratulates local legislators, especially State Representative David Cohen, for hastening to put the teeth back into the state Ethics Commission.

When Governor Dukakis, on Tuesday, signed into law a bill granting full enforcement powers to the commission, he restored the body to the status and power intended for it when it was originally created in 1978.

Originally formed as a watchdog organization empowered to prevent and, if necessary, penalize conflicts of interest among public employees, the commission lost its enforcement powers as a result of a Supreme Judicial Court ruling last July. At that time, frustrated commission members, led by Newton resident Colin Diver, put almost 80 percent of their caseload on hold.

Statehouse votes on the bill signed Tuesday show our senators and representatives were almost unanimously behind restoring the commission's enforcement powers. Seasoned Statehouse watchers must find that fact, in itself, somewhat unprecedented.

Given the propriety of the action, we do not find the unanimity of the vote that startling. But we are surprised and encouraged that the irregularities created by the SJC ruling could be corrected so quickly.

It might well be that Cohen's work as one of six members of the Conference Committee that hammered out a compromise version of the remedial bill. If so, we congratulate him.

Squawks over Sox coming early this year

That hope springing eternal in the hearts of Red Sox fans each time April arrives doesn't seem to be there. Patience has worn thin. Waiting for the new year that has never brought fulfillment is taking its toll. It's real tough being part of the Fenway faithful.

Unlike other seasons when the Home Town A.C. would make a strong run for the divisional marbles, only to collapse at the very end, the 1985 corps went into an early schedule slump and never pulled out of the .500 rut. Now, the trouble is that it's the same club. Trades looked like even swaps. The same question marks about pitching, speed on the bases, clutch hitting remain.

So, unless a bag of miracles can be found, the new quest opening in Detroit on Tuesday promises the same kind of frustration that has given it only two World Series shots since 1946.

Gratuitous advice is freely given professional sports teams. A fan works out his own stresses on the pay-for-play athletes, particularly in this time of such high salaries. Here's some of the same. More than anything, our American Leaguers need a youth movement. Better to lose with new talent than to go along with performers who stack up as complacent journeymen or over-the-hill retreads.

Come to think of it, Red Sox policy for a long while back has been to reach out for veterans who have peaked. Rookies breaking are a rarity in the chummy little Lansdowne Street playstead. Teams like Toronto, Montreal, Los Angeles and Houston come to mind as having had more success with farm team stimulation.

Past failure was often blamed on the fact that the Sox were Yawkey-pampered "millionaires." Today, most of the established big leaguers are rolling in lush contracts, even .250 hitters and under .500 pitchers. Making poor Manager Don Zimmer a scapegoat was another convenient dodge. More than anything, the front office rated blame for weakness in both trades and player development.

Enough of this hot stove anguish. Maybe this is the year, after all, even though a Baylor-for-Easler swap has such a familiar ring. We can't wait for the return to Fenway, finest of all ball parks in the land to be a grandstand expert.

'Musical chairs' in the Statehouse

By Loring Swaim

You've got to admit, when it comes to politics, Bay Staters have class.

Indeed, of 50 American states, when the specialty is politics, we're in a class by ourselves.

The riches now embarrassing the commonwealth are not confined to tax revenues.

We've suddenly got elective offices up for grabs which, given their usual perceived obscurity, most mortals are surprised to learn are so feverishly coveted.

We've suddenly got breathless politicians trampling each other in a stampede to reach for the elusive brass ring–as if the very future of the commonwealth depended on their availablility.

Nowhere is political speculation more palpable nor are juices flowing faster than on Beacon Hill, that Athens of American politics where ferment is the one constant.

What with such intense interest now in freshly-minted vacancies, one even dares venture the sardonic conclusion that governmental skills in the commonwealth must have been rotting in obscurity for years, robbed of their full exercise by congestion at the top, freed at last to soar to their inherent brilliance.

House Speaker Tip O'Neill, deciding to close out a 35-year career in Congress, was the first to set mouths to watering. The Eighth Congressional District he represents holds a special mystique for the nation, thanks to its larger-than-life occupants. Contenders for the O'Neill seat immediately leaped for the luscious bait, various of them only to flop back to the pool as realism set in.

State Auditor John Finnegan, a brooding political presence, announced last week he too was stepping out of office. Time to ponder his options. A round of frenzied soul-searching in both parties continues to greet that decision all week.

Attorney General Frank Bellotti stunned the Democratic establishment a month ago by announcing that, after three four-year terms, he would not seek re-election. He was quitting while ahead. The eyes of DAs all over the commonwealth promptly lit up, only to glaze over as polls said otherwise.

Even Republican leader Bill Robinson is finally vacating his "loyal opposition" role in the House. Having long discouraged intramural contests among Republicans, he appears poised to challenge non other than Republican state committee chairman Andy Natsios for Auditor Finnegan's job (Natsios having slyly upstaged him by preempting the field 2 1/2 hours earlier).

And of course, perennial party-pooper Ted Kennedy's "I will not run in '86" declaration opened up exciting running room for Mike Dukakis. The Governor shuttles to Washington regularly these days to showcase state initiatives to address national problems, a.k.a., to test the waters. A suddenly hot property, he.

The wheel of political fortune spins erratically. It catches most politicians unprepared to seize the moment. For every hopeful with the chutzpah to challenge an entrenched incumbent, there are a dozen others eager to scramble for that premium entity, an open seat. Suddenly that golden opportunity looms. Higher office beckons. Destiny dances giddily in one's head. "What the heck, I'm as good as the others; why not give it a shot?"

With fields correspondingly crowded, fame of name is a tangible asset. For those without high recognition, it takes big bucks to get attention. Money up front is often the decisive consideration, not that oft-stung vendors require cash in advance.

Not only is a scramble on for the above major political plums; those who abandon their safe havens to climb for higher office leave their secondary rungs open for less ambitious candidates. But nothing is more pitiful than the compulsive politician shamelessly shopping for a opening.

What can one say?

As the music swells on crowded Bay State ballrooms where musical chairs are in full swing, a humble observer offers this bit of encouragement–May all your fortune cookies be positive!

GOPs want districts redrawn

By William G. Robinson

Republicans this week filed suit in federal court to delay this year's legislative elections until districts are redrawn to reflect recent shifts in population which point up new strength in Republican areas.

In comparing figures from the 1980 federal census with preliminary results from the 1985 state count, there have been major population shifts in areas where the Republican party is already strong, such as the South Shore and the Cape.

The class action lawsuit calls for the legislation to use the 1985 state census figures in drawing districts for this November's election. Democratic leaders had planned to complete the redistricting for the 1988 elections at the earliest. Republicans, however, point to a 1983 federal court order that forced Boston to redraw its council districts using the latest available census data. This necessitated a delay in the elections. This order was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

For Republicans, the redistricting is good news as up to six House seats and two Senate seats could be gained as a result of the South Shore and Cape Cod population growth.

According to figures from the 1985 state census, some House districts have increased in population by as much as 100 per cent. Some Cape Cod districts now have up to 10,000 more residents than certain Boston districts. The average district consists of 36,000 people.

The Republicans who have filed the suit say the redistricting is feasible for this year's election and deny that it is strictly a partisan effort, but rather one of fairness. Areas with increased populations deserve increased representation, and this holds true regardless of party affiliation. It is not in the best interest of good government in Massachusetts to deny any of our citizens adequate representation in the legislature.

Water—sewer hikes protested

We strongly object to the water rate increase being foisted on to the duped, unlistened to and unrebuttable public. Small cost of living public utility increases are bad enough, but enormous increases of 30, 50 or 75 percent are unpalatable and are dead wrong, unfair and verges on corrupted collusion! This is the end-around football play. The liberal snakes still want to live inefficiently and are still trying to abort Proposition 2½ one way or another!

We as families stay within our budgets, spend with saneness and try to be as efficient as possible. Why can't venal pols learn and see that their 35 years of a free boat ride (wild spending) must stop.

First, they highly increased our water bills, then they sneaked and skulked in the new sewer water tax (first we only paid for the water, now we pay to drain it. This is called "double dittling"), and now they want to increase both by almost doubling (74 percent I think)!

People, please vote with smarts! The state has a $365 million surplus why isn't it used? Why not? What are we saving all of it for. The $54 million debt is 15 percent of 365 million (almost the interest for one year).

'Shocked' by NSF solicitation

To the editor:

As a recent recipient of a letter from the Newton Schools Foundation, requesting a "donation" for the public school, I am totally shocked.

My parents paid dearly in taxes for good teachers, additions, new high school (South) and accelerated curriculums. If they and others at the time "carried the ball" in the 50's and 60's when I went through the Newton School, then it is terribly unfair to expect funds to come from outside the community—in fact it is downright nerve to ask.

Since there is a decline in the enrollment, it seems to me it would be the school administrator's job to suggest to the school board a solution to the problems, i.e. selling buildings at "market value" to generate income and/or start consolidating. But, don't ask me; I am paying my share of school taxes here in New Hampshire.

School budget story shallow

To the editor:

I would like to take strong exception to your "color coded" front page chastisement of the citizens of Newton regarding their lack of participation in the March 17th school committee meeting on the FY '87 school department budget.

This hearing came at the very end of the budget process which was closely followed for a number of weeks by many Newton citizens, including various representatives of the Newton Council of PTA's as well as the Newton League of Women voters.

In general, I believe, the citizens of Newton were pleased with the FY '87 budget, as presented. The school budget directed additional funds to fund teacher pay increases as well as postively focusing attention on. 1.) Added instructional equipment textbooks and supplies. 2.) Limiting class size by increasing reserve teacher positions at all levels. 3.) Increased curriculum and staff development program.

The budget process was closely followed by many caring citizens of Newton and your newspaper chose to "sling mud" because no one chose to speak up at the final meeting.

The Graphic should know that the citizens of Newton want the best for their schools, that they care deeply about the schools and follow the doings of both the Superintendent and the School Committee carefully. Your report was shallow, misleading and unnecessary.

Reasons for rate hikes

To the editor:

With regard to the controversy in Newton concerning water rate increases by the MASS Water Resources Authority, I would like to put forward a few facts which hopefully will clarify the situation.

First, under the MDC we were getting water at an unreasonably low price. When I last checked it, the MDC was charging Newton 17¢ per 100 cubic feet of water. 100 cubic feet equals 750 gallons. Whenever the MDC proposed rate increases, the legislators would howl in protest. The MDC would then back off fearing their next budget would be cut by the legislature in retaliation.

Second, the MDC was paid for by all the taxpayers of the state whether or not they were on the system. The MWRA is based upon the user fee concept. Those who use it pay for it. Those who do not us it do not pay for it.

Further, the MWRA budget is not subject to the legislative process. Lastly, it should be noted that the 127 page law which set up the MWRA contains the provision that the authority can not lose money.

Thanks to Law Dept.

To the editor:

On November 22, 1985 I had an accident at Newton Corner. Driving over the railroad tracks my left front tire was blown out by a rut in the road. I filed a claim with the City of Newton to recover the damages to the car. On March 28, 1986 I received a check from the City of Newton.

It tooks four months for the legal process to be completed. The bottom line however, is that the system works if you work it. I feel that the positive result of this experience must be shared with the public.

The media is laden with depressing and negative stories. People complain constantly about our government and injustice. I feel that the positive events must be shared also. So here it is - thank you for your cooperation, Madelyn Morris and the Law Department/City of Newton.

Can state solve city's problems?

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Should the state grant Newton more aid to make up for lost federal funds, it still might not lift all the clouds looming over next year's city budget.

The House currently is considering a bill to increase the amount of money granted to communities like Newton that would receive little local aid for canceled federal dollars under the state's original plan.

If the House and Senate enact the bill, Newton could gain an additional $451,978 to offset cutbacks in the federal revenue sharing.

In his annual budget address, last week, Mayor Theodore D. Mann said the city expects to lose some $800,000 in canceled federal revenue sharing and Community Development Block Grant funds.

But Mann noted that local pressures — such as rising personnel salaries and school costs — also are straining the municipal economy and many local officials may feel $450,000 in new state money is not enough.

Others — most notably police and firefighters negotiating for a new contract, and Alderman Richard McGrath — have said the city is sitting on an $8 million surplus and predictions of doom and gloom are greatly exaggerated.

Police officers have voted to accept a city offer, ending a 21-month wage dispute. Firefighters and the city are scheduled to continue negotiations.

McGrath has said Mann's proposed $115 million budget for fiscal 1987 is loaded with surplus and "fat." Missed opportunities for state funds and poor judgments by officials make it difficult for Newton to secure more money from the legislature, according to McGrath.

Newton would receive only $60,000 to replace its federal losses under the state's original reimbursement plan.

When told the legislature was considering raising that amount, Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, said, "I'm not going to count on it."

Earlier last week, Cirillo presented figures to show the state's local aid formula is unfairly weighted against Newton.

The formula is based on the state's perception of each community's need. City officials wonder just what the state means by "need."

According to Cirillo, Francis Keefe, secretary of the state Department of Administration and Finance, defines need as a community's ability to raise revenues.

Newton now possesses around $4 million in reserve tax capacity — that is, the difference between the amount of property taxes the city is raising and what it could collect under Proposition 2½.

But Cirillo said Newton has the seventh smallest percentage of reserve tax capacity out of 100 communities that have not raised all the property taxes they can.

North Attleboro, for example, has the greatest percentage of reserve tax capacity of the 100 communities, yet ranks 10th on that list in amount of local aid per resident, he said.

Newton would receive $8.36 per president in new state aid under the present formula and roughly $5 more per person if the latest legislative aid proposal is enacted. North Attleboro, under the present formula, would receive $43.69 per person, Cirillo said.

Of the state's 21 most heavily populated communities, Newton ranks first in per capita earnings ($16,996) and per capita property taxes paid ($971), Cirillo said.

"What this says is we're paying the highest property tax, the highest income tax and getting the least state aid," he said.

Roberta Chicos, local aid analyst for the state Department of Administration and Finance, said the state defines "need" by the amount of necessary costs a community has. They include school, public building and sewer expenses, she said.

"Newton seems to be straining its property tax, but so are other communities," she said. "How dependent do they want to be on state aid?"

"Remember, we still have the largest local aid package we've ever had," Chicos added. "This is the only state in the country which is trying to cushion federal cutbacks."

Solid waste contracts are doubling and tripling, insurance costs are skyrocketing and clean water expenses are on the rise, he said.

But right now, the squabble over state dollars seems to pale in comparison to Newton's local budget pressures — such as a growing school budget and employee salary disputes.

Mann has recommended cutting the School Department's proposed $46.4 million budget proposal.

The mayor accompanied his budget presentation with a chart showing school costs have risen 21 percent since 1982 — from $37.7 million to the $45.6 million Mann recommends for next year. At the same time, student enrollment has decreased 20 percent and the cost of educating each child has risen from $3,300 to $5,000.

School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile has defended the budget, saying it has grown because of employee wage increases and inflation. To judge school costs by declining enrollment is a poor analogy, he has said.

Mann has criticized the School Committee for including temporary state funds as part of the latest teacher wage hike. Doing so has inflated the demands of other unions and leaves the city to foot the bill when the state money is gone, the mayor has said.

Paul Coletti, chairman of the aldermanic Finance Committee, has said by 1988 the city will probably be unable to meet expenses with available revenues.

Newton eventually may have to raise charges for services, dip into its reserve tax capacity, cut employees or seek an override of Proposition 2½, he said.

The Board of Aldermen, the mayor and the School Committee are likely to agree on compromise figures for an acceptable fiscal 1987 budget, but there is doubt they will resolve the state and local issues underlying those numbers.

Chimps, chumps and the single parent

She's a single parent, and I'm sure that being self-reliant is both a necessity and a source of pride.

By Sue M. Rasala

Remember the chimpanzees that sat in a cage and couldn't get the banana that was lying outside the bars? The film is often shown in introductory psychology courses. I saw it freshman year.

One chimp tried to reach through the bars and then gave up. One played with a stick that was in the cage. Another tried to grab the banana, played with the stick, and then used the stick as a tool to push the banana to the cage. This clever chimp finally ate with glee.

As the professor talked about the significance of chimps being tool users, I thought about how smart I was. I couldn't remember ever learning to use a yardstick to get marbles out from under the refrigerator when I was a child. I felt no relationship to the apes and, in fact, forgot about them until last spring.

It was Friday, a beautifully clear, sunny spring day. My work week was over, and I was taking my daughter to her riding lesson. I brought along a beach chair and looked forward to watching the horses and riders in a semi-detached haze of relaxation, but the haze descended too soon.

I locked my keys in the car. As my daughter went to tack up a horse, I gazed through the driver's window at the ring of keys lying on the seat and knew that I had just locked myself into a problem.

I remembered that this new car had slide locks, not push buttons, like my old car. Those I could unlock with a coat hanger. These slide locks were designed to discourage car thieves from "breaking in" -- and they sure discouraged me. I asked another parent for a ride home after the lesson, and resigned myself to coming out in the evening with my husband to get the car.

For a half hour I stood, stoically, by the fence–my lawn chair was locked in the truck. Someone suggested that I try a coat hanger, and I said it was hopeless on this car. I watched the horses going round and round, trotting, cantering. Then the riders began to take jumps. Suddenly my mind let go of the slide locks and fastened on the ring of keys. The car window was rolled down about an inch. Maybe I could hook the keys and wiggle them out the window.

I looked through the barns and tack room. Loose wire is not left lying around stables, but I found a coat hanger in the director's office and a whip with a knob on the end. Armed with these tools, and hope, I walked to the car.

First, I experimented with the hanger until I could hook the ring of keys. I pulled the ring up to the crack in the window, and then watched as the keys slipped off and dropped behind the front seat, beyond the reach of the coat hanger. I was disgusted with myself, but right away I thought about the window. Maybe it could be cranked down farther. I tried and hooked the handle, but the hanger was not strong enough to turn it. At that point I gave up.

As I was standing by the car another mother, Kate, arrived and I began to tell her the story of my disappointing attempts. As I talked she took the coat hanger out of my hands, stuck it through the window, took it out again, bent it double making a loop and began to try to loop the window handles. I think I was still complaining about how I would have to come back out in the evening to pick up my car, when the window went down a fraction of an inch. I watched Kate as she pulled the window crank forward with the looped coat hanger, pushed it down with the knobbed end of the buggy whip, reached in and opened the car door.

Lamely I asked her how she'd learned break into a car. She said, "Oh, I've forgotten my house keys so many times, that I have had practice breaking in. It's actually so easy, it's scary."

Then I remembered the chimps. I knew Kate was the smart successful chimp, and I was the dumb one.

Kate had not been taught how to break into a car, but she knew how to size up a situation and use the tools she had. I was glad that I was not the dumb, dumb chimp and had finally stopped thinking about the door locks and made some attempts to get into the car; but it was clear to me how Kate seemed to play around with what was possible while I got caught on what was not possible.

I thought about how self-reliant she was. She didn't think of waiting for someone else to solve the problem. She's a single parent, and I'm sure that being self-reliant is both a necessity and a source of pride. I wondered, if a chimp didn't know it would be fed or if my husband was unavailable, would we work harder to solve the problems ourselves?

I think again and again about the chimps and how little I learned from them when I was 18. Sometimes I wonder if the commotion around my car was being videotaped–maybe a group of chimps preparing films for their psychology class.

"If the teachers were tested for drugs, half would be fired," one ballot read. "Why us?"

Officers will be forced to undergo drug tests if "reasonable cause" is determined by Chief William Quinn. Nothing in the contract stipulates what reasonable cause means. Glenn and many members of the rank and file have complained of the contract's vagueness.

The chief's request will be reviewed by a three-man committee consisting of representatives from the chief's office, the union and the city's director of personnel. The review committee will decide whether or not there is sufficient evidence to order a urine sample to be tested for drugs.

According to the contract, "the chief reserves his right to impose discipline." A first offender who tests positive for marijuana will not be disciplined until the Civil Service appeals process is exhausted, during which time the officer will be subject to random urine tests.

There is nothing in the contract outlining what punishment the chief can give and there is also nothing stating how an officer abusing a drug other than marijuana will be dealt with. Glenn has said that will give the chief a wide latitude to "get rid of the people he doesn't like."

In addition to reasonable cause, any officer seeking promotion will be tested. The tests will for reasonable cause will become effective July 1, 1986, and the tests for promotions will go into effect January 1, 1987.

The new contract will also require employees hired after January, 1986, to be non-smokers. The city will "assist" any officer unable to quit smoking.

The ratification ends any police threat of picketing the April 21 Boston Marathon. The city and representatives of the firefighters union will meet today in an attempt to end their contract dispute.

Some police officers contacted during a shift changes last week expressed dissatisfaction with the four-year contract and said it was unfair that the police should be the first municipal department to undergo drug testing.

"I think it stinks," Thomas Fleming, a former union official said of the tentative agreement. "We've been negotiating for two years and the teachers still got more than we got. People think less of us, I guess. They think we are lower class."

Fleming said the contract "will be ratified" because "the guys are selling themselves short for a few extra bucks."

"These guys are going to vote to accept the contract out of frustration," he added. "The city has worn them down. We'll have to go through the same thing again in 1988 when we have to negotiate with that fool Mayor Mann. This is the reason I quit being a union representative. There is just too much frustration."

He added that the city is asking for drug testing because it has a reputation to live up to.

"This city has to be the first in everything," he said. "We were the first to have women on the force and now we will be the first to have drug testing. I don't use drugs and I don't have anything to hide, but this is just another thing that I don't like."

"The public just wants to be reassured that the police officers are not abusing drugs," Sgt. Vincent Taylor said. "I tend to agree with that. I just think that it is unfair that police officers will be tested while other municipal employees are not. What about the teachers. For that matter, why not test the legislators or surgeons before they are called into the operating room?"

ACLU balks at drug testing

NEWTON -- Mandatory drug testing of employees is unconstitutional, according to an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU). In addition, the ACLU will contest the contract Newton police ratified last week if any officer files a complaint.

"We oppose any mandatory drug testing of any employee," ACLU attorney Marjorie Heins says. "It is a violation of the 4th Amendment and the employee's right to privacy."

While Heins says drug testing language in the contract ratified by Newton police yesterday regarding reasonable cause is not out of line, the language requiring those seeking promotions to undergo testing is.

positive for any drug other than marijuana be subject to immediate dismissal. Merrick says he has some difficulties with any language that distinguishes between marijuana and any other drug.

"If he's a first offender, what's the difference?" Merrick asks. "Either a substance is illegal or it is not. Studies have shown that you can get into as much trouble with alcohol and cocaine as you can with marijuana. The only difference is that you can buy alcohol in a store."

No matter what substance is being abused, Merrick says first offenders should be protected.

"I think people today are looking at drug abuse almost as alcohol abuse was looked at years ago," he says. "In 1970 you could pinch a guy if he was drunk, now we can't. I think there should be protection for first-time offenders."

Indiscriminate firings would be detrimental to an entire force, Merrick says.

"We would be opposed to arbitrarily firing the guy if he is a first offender," he says. "It would be economic suicide. A force spends a lot of money on a guy for training, uniforms and equipment. If a guy is caught, it doesn't make a lot of sense to boot the guy out the door for the first offense."

While he says there should be some guidelines to protect the officers, Merrick will not comment on what the NPA should be bargaining for.

"How could we tell the Newton branch what to do?," he asks. "We could make suggestions to build in the protection so the chief won't go firing guys willy-nilly all over the place, but we do not tell the locals how to do their job."

Firefighter's union alone without pact for no drugs," said Ciccone. "But the language has to be in the best interest of the employee as well as the employer."

Both firefighters declined to say whether the city wants their union to accept any form of drug testing.

The new police contract permits Police Chief William Quinn to determine if there is "reasonable cause" to test an officer for drugs.

A three-man committee consisting of representatives from the city's director of personnel, the chief's office and the union would decide whether there is enough evidence to demand a urine sample be tested for drugs.

The contract does not define what is "reasonable cause" and some officers have complained the drug clause is too vague.

McArdle said the police drug clause does not state the rights of officers to be tested, leaving them open to a "witch hunt" by department administration.

The testing could place a stigma on an officer, even if he was proven to be drug free, both McArdle and Ciccone said.

"They're talking about confidentiality," he said. "You know as well as I do, nothing in this city remains confidential."

Reports have indicated urinalysis is only 75 percent accurate, meaning an officer who had not taken illegal drugs might be falsely accused, said Ciccone. By the time he cleared himself of the charge, his reputation could be damaged, he said.

McArdle said a provision in the police contract requiring all officers hired after January 1986 to be non-smokers could create dissension.

Once again, he and Ciccone declined to say whether the city wants a similar agreement from firefighters.

A no-smoking clause creates a "two-tiered" system, with veterans possessing a right denied to new employees, McArdle observed.

Ciccone said he believes the clause would not become a stumbling block to firefighter negotiations. But he questioned the fairness of negotiating terms for future employees.

"You're bargaining for the rights of people who haven't been hired yet," he noted. "I don't know if that's just."

It is difficult to determine if firefighters are at a disadvantage because they are the last union holding out, McArdle said.

"We have been the last ones before," said Ciccone. "If all parties are sincere, an agreement can be reached. If not, we have the stamina."

Big hike in water rates

McGrath's call to recommit the rate hike to his committee because the increase will be part of director of utilities operating budget.

McGrath charged municipal sewer-water services are so poorly run that residents eventually could face health threats and the city runs the risk of lawsuits.

"The sewer department remains the most inefficient department in the city," he said.

But sewer-water rate hikes have nothing to do with Mann's reorganization, Coletti said. Increased MWRA charges — which could reach $7 million in five years — are unavoidable, he said. "You know and I know the rates are going up," said Coletti.

Alderman Joshua Davidson attacked the rate increase because it charges residents more than necessary now so rates can be stabilized for 2½ years. "It sets a precedent that we may bill for other services in advance," he said.

Instead, sewer-water bills should be raised annually to reflect the MWRA's increased charges each year so aldermen and residents can keep close watch on the authority, he said.

"We have no control over the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority other than our ability to question rates," he said.

But Coletti noted citizens already pay for many municipal services either before or after they receive them. Tax bills, for example, are paid for the previous half year, "which means you've lived here for six months at the city's expense," he said.

Alderman Dominic Taglienti said the MWRA and the city are seeking an open-ended tax. "They've got their hands so deep in our pockets I can feel them in my stockings," he said.

He noted that 10 years ago the Metropolitan District Commission — predecessor of the MWRA — spent millions of taxpayer dollars in an unsuccessful effort to clean up Boston Harbor.

Aldermen who fought the rate hike simply may be wary of arousing voters, said Coletti after the vote. "I just believe these people are afraid to face the reality," he said.

Battle weary

"After WrestleMania 2, the only thing he'll be doing is PolyGrip commercials," Arcidi predicted recently as he enjoyed an early spring in his backyard.

"My goal is to eliminate the football players first. I'd like to get a hold of that Refrigerator and throw him against the ropes a couple times, apply a few body slams, then dump him 12-feet down over the ropes and see if anything breaks," he said, his massive neck muscles tightening at the thought.

"It could be good for him. After all, it's hard to stay fat when you have to eat through a straw," Arcidi added.

He fared well amidst the more than two tons of sweating human flesh in the ring, but it was Big John Studd, Arcidi's arch enemy, who eventually launched the Fridge over the top rope and out of the match.

Arcidi had hoped to be one of the last five grapplers left in the ring when the dust cleared, but ended up being approximately the 10th man eliminated.

In an impressive display of strength, he took on "Golden Boy" Danny Spivey, Hillbilly Jim, good friend Bruno Sammartino and several others before Brian Blair, one half of "The Killer Bees" tandem, teamed up with two other wrestlers to twirl him out of the ring.

Andre the Giant, the man who has won more Battle Royals than anyone, eventually claimed victory.

Arcidi, a former Newton North High School science teacher, reached the pinnacle of iron pumping on March 3, 1985 in Hawaii, when he pressed more weight than any other man in history.

Lesser-known wrestling federations began recruiting him immediately.

But when Vince McMahon, owner, commentator and all-around guru of the WWF, materialized with a six-figure contract, Arcidi knew names like Brutus Beefcake and Uncle Elmer were in his future.

First, however, he had to attend a six-month wrestling school and spend four hours each day lifting weights, running, practicing his moves, holds and falls.

In the process, Arcidi dispelled the notion that all professional wrestling is choreographed. He cracked two ribs, dislocated an elbow and severely twisted an ankle.

He won his first televised match in mid-December, disposing of Mario Mancini in two-and-a-half minutes and has since compiled an undefeated 32-0 record.

"I feel my bear hug has got to be the most devastating weapon in professional wrestling right now. It initiates a great deal of pain in the lower spine area," Arcidi said.

"I like to use my speed to get my opponent in a very disoriented state of mind, give him a couple drops and slams and then throw him out of the ring. Mostly though, manhandling is what I like to do," he added.

In preparation for the Battle Royal, Arcidi did what he does best.

With the help of fellow Waltham "weightheads" Fred Smerlas and Arthur Carolus, he reached his goal of five repetitons of 600 pounds each and added six pounds of weight to his already massive frame.

Arcidi, who called Perry "a very cocky human being," did not appreciate the presence of pro football players in the Battle Royal and carried through on his vow to help any wrestler being manhandled by a member of the gridiron contingent.

"These football players think they can capitalize in wrestling. It's just like if I went into football and decided to be the next John Riggins," he said.

Arcidi also didn't intend to lend Studd a hand.

He said there is "bad blood" between himself and Studd because the latter insists that he is the strongest man in the WWF.

"I'll challenge him to prove it anytime, anywhere with weights or in the ring," Arcidi said.

He also has an intense dislike for "Adorable" Adrian Adonis, Brutus Beefcake, Greg "The Hammer" Valentine and King Kong Bundy.

"They stand for everything I'm against," Arcidi said. "Bundy ought to try to invest in the Cambridge diet plan or something. He's a joke. You can always find him near a Tasty Cake truck."

Although too busy "to party" with most of the bonafide WWF stars like Hulk Hogan, Capt. Lou Albano and Piper, Arcidi said wrestling is no different from any other sport.

And yes, Randy "Macho Man" Savage treats his grilfriend, the lovely Elizabeth, the same in or out of the ring - "like she's from a leper colony," he added.

As Arcidi sees it, there is only one stumbling block in the way of his goal of capturing the heavyweight championship belt now resting on Hogan's hips - he has no manager.

Sammartino and Capt. Lou Albano have been his guiding lights, but Arcidi needs someone in his corner permanently, someone to take care of business.

"I hope to stay healthy and get a title shot as early as eight to 10 months from now. I'd love to have Bruno as my manager. With him behind me, I can go all the way to the top," he said.

Monday night, however, there was no room for a manager in The Rosemont Horizon ring. Arcidi was on his own.

"It definitely will not be choreographed," he said prior to the bout. "My body will tell you it's for real. After the Battle Royal, I'm going to come home to Newton, take off each extremity, soak them, wring them out and let them hang for a while."

75 condos urged for Warren Jr. High

By Leslie Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Warren Junior High School should be sold for no less than $2 million, but only if the city can prove it would not be better financially to use it for the new library.

The aldermanic Real Property Reuse Committee has recommended selling the site for at least $2 million to be developed for not more than 75 rental dwelling units or condominiums.

Mambers also have decided that 10 percent of the dwellings must be reserved for low-income families and another 10 percent for moderate income tenants.

But last week, the committee voted to hold the item until test borings of the Homer/Walnut street site prove ground water there would not make construction too expensive.

No action can be taken on the Warren until the committee releases the item for a vote by the full Board of Aldermen.

Alderman Richard Bullwinkle said Mayor Theodore D. Mann told him he will not consider placing the new library at the Warren. "He was very clear on his position," Bullwinkle told aldermen and residents at the committee meeting Thursday night.

Mann has said he hopes selling the Warren - with the exception of surrounding recreation lands - can be used to help pay for the estimated $12 million library.

Joseph S. Michelson, chairman of the Designer Selection Committee, said in a Feb. 18 letter that test borings at the Homer/Walnut parcel are "unjustified at this time."

Regarding subsurface water conditions, he said, "My professional opinion is that such an effect (on construction costs) would be minimal."

Soil borings should not be done until the architect is chosen to do preliminary building designs, he said.

His committee's list of recommended architects should be on the mayor's desk the week of April 21 and test boring data could be available in early June, he said.

A committee of West Newton neighbors has said they want the new library at the 3½ story, vacant junior high. They will accept using it for residences only if the city proves the Homer/Walnut site is economically sound.

Should the Warren be sold and the city later discover the Homer/Walnut site is too expensive, the junior high would be lost as a more feasible library option, said Timothy Dacey, co-chairman of the Neighborhood Steering Committee.

"If that's the case it doesn't seem prudent to get rid of the Warren until we've done a subsurface investigation," said Dacey. "I can't see how that's wasted money."

A member of the Mayor's Library Task Force Committee said that group examined many possible parcels and the Homer/Walnut location seemed the best.

"That's where the library belongs," he said. "It's in a central part of the city. It's a beautiful, elegant site."

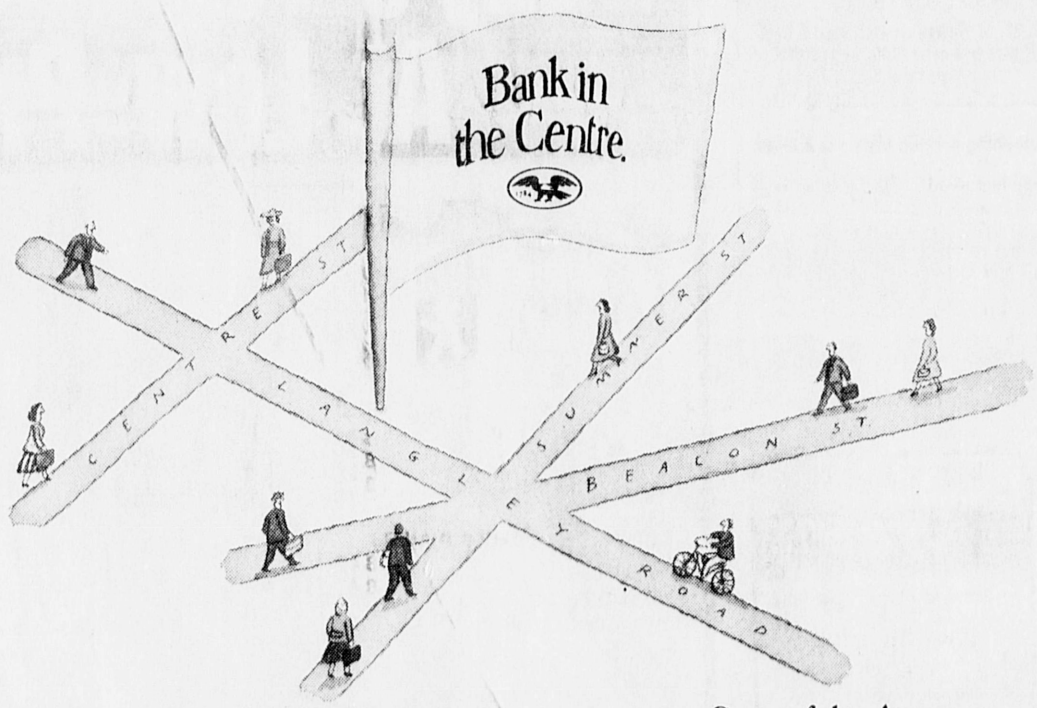

Last Oct. 7, aldermen appropriated $250,000 for detailed drawings, building footage estimates, and soil borings, Alderman Paul Colletti said.

The Board of Aldermen must approve not only funding and the use of the Homer/Walnut site, but exactly where the library will be placed on the parcel, Coletti said. Aldermen would feel "a lot more comfortable" if test borings were done, he said.

"We've got the ball, the court and the basket," he said. "We've got the money, the site and the zoning. We're the only game in town."

Alderman Carol Robinson said she was incensed at Mann's refusal to authorize the ground borings, which she saw as a usurpation of the board's powers to control land use in Newton. "Don't play games when I'm in the midst of it," she warned.

About 10 employers called police last month with complaints of lost or stolen silverware and jewelry, according to Detective Jack Claflin. All of them suspected the cleaning service, he added.

According to Claflin, Mazolla has returned six sets of stolen silverware to the rightful owners and is trying to repossess the rest.

The defendant's case is scheduled for hearing April 16 in Middlesex Superior Court by a jury of six.

Unregistered vehicles on increase, says chief

NEWTON — Newton police officers are finding more unregistered motor vehicles, especially where selective enforcement operations are taking place.

Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn says, "Officers stopping motorists for motor vehicle violations are finding that there is an increase in unregistered motor vehicles."

According to the chief, this can be attributed to many factors. For example, car registrations terminate at different times throughout the year.

Many cities and towns now utilize a policy in which the Registry of Motor Vehicles is notified of unpaid parking tickets, so that the Registry places a restriction on the registration renewal until such tickets are appropriately handled.

Another reason is that car registrations are valid for two years from the date of registration, while inspection stickers and auto insurance policies are issued on a yearly basis, with separate expiration dates. Insurance companies notify their clients prior to the registration deadline. Many times, however, a person will change residence during the year and will fail to update insurance records.

In conclusion, Chief Quinn says, "It is the responsibility of each motorist to ensure their auto is properly registered. A person convicted of a violation of this law ... can receive a fine of up to $100 for the first offense and up to $1,000 for a subsequent offense."

Quinn urges city residents to get car inspection stickers

NEWTON — Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn states, "More vehicles are being operated on our roads without being properly inspected." Such vehicles, when stopped by a law enforcement officer, are subject to a motor vehicle citation and a $50 fine under MGL Ch. 90 Sec. 7A.

"The real issue, however," states the chief, "is that inspections are required as a means of ensuring that motor vehicles meet certain standards of safety. Increasingly,we are seeing vehicles on the road that have an expired inspection sticker."

Often this is an "honest mistake" in that many drivers are under the impression that they will receive written notification as to when their vehicle is due for an inspection. "This," stresses the chief, "is not true. Rather, it is the motorist's responsibility to know when the current inspection sticker expires — a matter of taking the vehicle to an authorized service station on or before the last day of the month indicated in the center of the sticker placed on the car window at the time of the last inspection. Each certificate of inspection is valid for one full year or until ownership of the vehicle is transferred."

In conclusion, Chief Quinn urges all owners of motor vehicles to take an extra minute before getting into the car and driving away to look closely at the current sticker and, if it has expired or will soon expire, to take the appropriate steps.

Call boxes will speed up response

The Metropolitan District Commission recently announced plans to install new emergency call boxes along the parks and roadways within its jurisdiction.

The new call boxes will provide a direct link to the MetroPolice dispatcher instead of having to go through district stations and then being routed through headquarters.

In a prepared statement, MDC Acting Superintendant Nelson Barner said, "Time is the most precious commodity in an emergency situation. The new call boxes will eliminate delays by supplying the public with speedier response from police, ambulances and other vital emergency service equipment."

The new boxes will allow citizens to contact the police dispatcher by pressing a single button. The location of the box will automatically be displayed on a screen in front of the dispatcher.

MetroPolice Officer Larry Gillis said the boxes will be located in accessible locations, such as in front of the ice rinks, bathhouses and in breakdown areas along roadways. They will be made of impact-resistant materials to protect against vandalism and will have automatic alarms to indicate tempering or a power outage. They also will be supplied with battery backups to ensure service during a massive power failure.

City offers reminder of rubbish regulations

NEWTON — With warm weather approaching, the Newton Health Department wishes to remind residents about the regulations for proper storage of garbage and rubbish.

Garbage or mixed garbage and rubbish must be stored in watertight receptacles made of metal or other durable, rodent-proof material. Containers stored outside — including dumpsters and compactors — must be easily cleanable, shall be provided with tight-fitting lids, doors, covers and must be kept covered when not in actual use.

A sufficient number of containers must be provided to hold all the garbage and rubbish that accumulates prior to final disposal. It is important that dumpsters be covered, especially overnight, so as to prevent insect and rodent attraction.

Sanitary inspectors Charles Hopkinson, Charles Pierce, John McNally and Robert DeLuca plan to spot-check throughout the city to ensure compliance with health regulations.

Those with questions about proper garbage and rubbish storage are asked to telephone the Newton Health Department at 552-7058.

Diving into A DVENTURE

MDC diver Armand Ouellette makes a quick change of clothes at the scene.

Ouellette and fellow diver Greg Molster work on van that plunged off Bussey Street in Dedham one night recently.

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

WALTHAM — In a time where there are few frontiers left to explore, Armand Ouellette is a "Trekkie" of sorts.

"I guess you can say I like to boldly go where no man has gone before," the 44-year-old MDC diver says from the safety of his Waltham living room.

While Manifest Destiny may be a thing of the past, the motivation behind it is still very much alive. It is especially so in men like Ouellette, for whom danger is more of a thrill than a warning.

"I'm a little crazy in the first place," he says, sipping coffee from a mug with little blue whales on it. "I don't drink alcohol, so I have to do something. Besides, I do have a sense of adventure."

It was that sense of adventure that prodded Ouellette — at six feet, three inches tall, 225 pounds — a big, affable bear of a man, to first try scuba diving 27 years ago on the Merrimack River. A friend convinced him to try the then new swimming technique, an acronym for self-contained underwater breathing apparatus invented by Jacques Cousteau just before World War II. In those days though, if you wanted a scuba suit, you couldn't just go out and buy one. You had to make it yourself.

Ouellette (top) and Molster attach tow cable.

"Back then, rubber was sold like lumber in four-foot by eight-foot sheets," Ouellette recalls. "We'd go out and buy a sheet of rubber and have a friend trace the outline of our bodies onto it. We'd then cut out the outlines, glue the two pieces together and when it dried, we'd have a scuba suit."

For Ouellette, scuba diving meant a new kind of freedom.

"Some guys like to fly, others like to sail," he muses. "Me? Just give me a couple of air tanks and I'm gone. There's nothing like diving in the clear blue water of the Carribbean."

The Carribbean, though, is not where Ouellette spends most of his underwater time. More often than not, the 13-year veteran Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) motorcycle officer can be found plodding along the murky bottom of Boston Harbor or the Charles, Mystic and Muddy rivers.

"Ninety percent of the time, there is no visibility," he says of the local waterways. "It is a psychological thing being down there in the dark, dirty and often freezing water where it is absolutely gross and squishy. The bottom comes up around you. When you go into the ooze, it's like swimming through pudding."

To prepare for their work, MDC diver-trainees learn how to cope with the lack of visibility by using blacked-out masks. That way, Ouellette says, the men can get used to searching for guns, bodies or any other debris at the bottom.

"The rubber is ¼-inch thick," he says. "That doesn't really leave you much in the way of tactile sense. Sometimes, if you pick something up and hold it right up against your mask, you can maybe tell from the outline what it is, but most of the time we are in total darkness. That is why we feel it is important to have the trainees swim with the blacked-out masks."

It takes a certain breed to swim through the pudding, and Oullette says the MDC divers counter the unknown with their own brand of gallows humor.

"We sort of make light of the risks," he says. "We also make light of some of the things we find. Everyone remembers their first body. For me, it was a nine-year-old boy who fell through the ice. You can't let it get to you, though. We have our own sick jokes that I really can't tell you here."

One story he did relate was that of an MDC diver who was called in to retrieve a car with a body in the back seat.

"One of the guys came up and swore that the guy in the back seat was alive," he says. "What really happened, though, was that this 300-pound guy was in the back seat of the car, rocking back and forth with the underwater current. I guess it would look like he was still alive, but the guy was definitely dead."

Since taking up the hobby/career, Ouellette has been asked to retrieve many things from many murky bottoms including bodies, guns, eye glasses, false teeth and fishing rods. But the most dangerous and difficult thing he was ever asked to locate was a leaking pipe at the bottom of a 100-foot-deep sewage treatment plant on Deer Island. The real trick, he says, was trying to find the pipe while "6 million gallons of raw sewage poured into the facility."

"To understand what we were up against," he explains, "you have to understand the layout of the Deer Island plant. Because Boston's sewer lines are all gravity fed, they are angled down. By the time they reach the plant, they are at the lowest point and very deep.

"There are dozens of pipes coming in from all over and all kinds of electrical, hydrolic, and other equipment, conduits and catwalks. The place looks like the engine room of an ocean liner, like the one in the Poseiden Adventure. In the total darkness, it took a long time to navigate around."

There are three ways, he says, that the Deer Island engineers can shut down a ruptured pipe: electrically, hydraulically or manually. By the time the engineers discovered the problem in June of 1983, however, their option was down to the last and Oullette and his team were brought in. Their objective was to crawl down 40 feet through machinery submerged in seemingly endless liquid refuse, reach a manual valve lock and shut off the flow of muck. It was a task, as Ouellette remembers it, easier said then done.

"I was the lead diver that day," Ouellette says with a gleam in his eyes. "It was my job to go down there first, even though I had no idea what I was looking for. I would go down there with a rope, swim a couple of feet, tie the rope off, surface and tell the engineer what I had felt. He would then explain to me where I was and would tell me to either turn right after 10 feet or whatever. It took me half a day and three tanks of air just to get to the bilges."

Once down in the bilges, though, Ouellette's dive team was just getting started.

"Now I was at the very bottom with all the pipes, and one-by-one I had to figure out which one was leaking. I made mental notes, consulted with the engineer again, who figured out where the problem was. We went back down and it took 400 turns to get the valve lock to close."

Saving the sewer system was not Ouellette's most pleasant experience at the time.

"We were not wearing environmental suits," he says, "so we could tell what we were swimming through. It seeped into my mouth and into my ears. I could taste it. I was as sick as a dog for three days afterwards. I was queasy, nauseous and vomiting. I went to the hospital, but the doctors said there was nothing they could do. Would I do it again? Of course, but then again, I'm a little crazy."

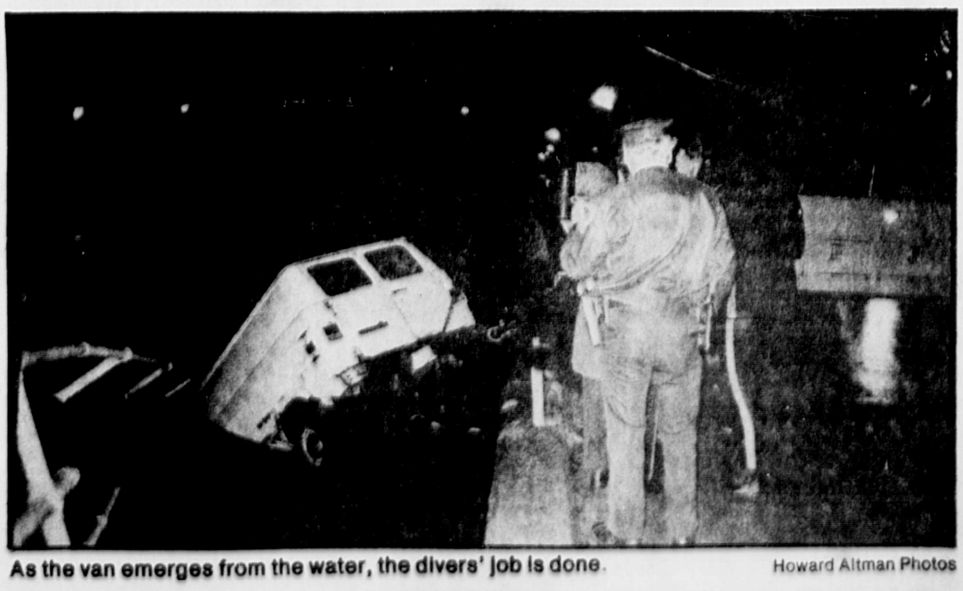

He may be crazy, but Ouellette, who received a medal and many commendations for his efforts, says the MDC dive team is very cautious. During the Deer Island operation, he had men behind him at all times ready to take him up if there was any problem. Only once in his career, he says, did he ever come close to dying.

"An old Polish fisherman fell off his boat in the Quabbin Reservoir," he says. "A line from his boat became attached to something in the water and the boat was going around and around in a circle. Somebody called us, but we had no idea where the old man was because his boat had been going around in circles.

"When we got there, I grabbed a tank without checking first to see how much air was left, a definite no-no. Low and behold, I was 135 feet under and my air gave out. Fortunately, there was an anchor line just about eight feet from me. I grabbed it and hand-over-hand pulled myself up. I got out of the water gasping for air and tingling from the nitrogen poisoning. I violated every rule of diving and was lucky to make it with only some temporary numbness in my arms and legs."

Despite the inherent risks, there are some benefits to being able to dive underwater. If he is having a couple of dozen people over to the house and he wants to make sure they don't leave hungry, Ouellette will don his gear, jump in the ocean and come back with "40 or 50 lobsters."

"Even a couple of years ago when the lobster men were crying," he says, "I had no trouble finding plenty. And I don't go anywhere near the traps, either."

As the van emerges from the water, the divers' job is done.

Property transfer results in tax savings

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

As a strategy for decreasing the estate taxes payable at my death, it has been suggested that I gift property to my minor grandchildren. This would also help to pay college tuition. Could you explain how this is done, and why it is advantageous?

Mrs. B.L., Newton

Dear Mrs. B.L.:

Transferring income-producing property to your grandchildren may be an appropriate way of transferring wealth for estate planning purposes, and also for providing for the non-support type financial needs of a minor.

The Uniform Gifts to Minors Act offers a convenient and inexpensive tax savings procedure for shifting taxable income from parent/grandparent to child. Through a simple registration process, income producing assets can be "gifted" to a child. If the child is a minor the transferred property is administered by a custodian until the child reaches the age of majority. At this point, the assets are turned over to the child.

Generally, the transfer would allow for the income produced from the property to be taxed at a lower rate, thus reducing the overall income tax of the family.

Example: Mr. Casson, a taxpayer in the 50 percent tax bracket, owns 150 shares of ABC stock, in addition to other securities which pay dividends that exhaust his dividend exclusion. The ABC stock pays annual dividends of $1,600. Mr. Casson decides to give the stock to his 2-year-old daughter Kerry. He registers the securities in his daughter's name and appoints his wife as custodian.

The transfer would leave Kerry with taxable income of $460, after her personal exemption of $1,040 and the dividend exclusion of $100. (Kerry's zero bracket amount cannot be used to shelter the dividend income since her father claims her as a dependent.) Kerry would incur a $52 tax liability. Compared to the $800 her father would have to pay, this results in a yearly family tax savings of $748.

Mr. Casson cannot use this income to fulfill any support obligations to Kerry without having the income taxed to him. However, he will be entitled to a dependency deduction for Kerry because:

- She is under 19 at the end of the year;
- He provides more than half of her support.

Securities are not the only type of income-producing property that may be transferred. Other qualifying assets include life insurance policies, annuity contracts and cash.

Estate planning: Individuals are able to transfer up to $10,000 a year ($20,000 if transferred jointly with a spouse) to each of any number of persons without incurring gift tax liability. By making gifts over the course of many years, a taxpayer can substantially reduce the tax that is imposed on a deceased taxpayer's estate.

What the future holds: Recently, the House Ways and Means Committee tentatively approved, in principle, a proposal that would reduce the tax advantages afforded under the Gifts to Minors Act. If the provision were to become law, income from property gifted to a child under age 14 by its parents would be taxed at the parent's higher tax rate. This provision would apply to taxable years after December 31, 1985.

Your financial adviser and attorney can provide more detailed information and should be consulted before any action is taken.

We're not keeping banker's hours April 14 and 15.

We're opening six Mutual Bank branches from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. for last-minute IRA and Keogh contributions only.

Last year, almost half of all tax-payers didn't contribute to an IRA or Keogh plan. And didn't get the substantial tax deductions they deserved. This year, Mutual Bank doesn't want you to miss out. So we're keeping six branches open late for your convenience.

Come in for a last minute tax deduction...

If you don't have a 1985 Individual Retirement Account, you still have time to write yourself a big tax deduction. Open your IRA by April 15 and you can deduct it from your 1985 income tax — up to $2,000 for a working individual! And up to $4,000 for a working couple.

And if you've already made your 1985 IRA, why not contribute to your 1986 IRA? You'll get all the tax benefits on your 1986 return. And, because you invested early in the year, you'll benefit from the tax-deferred interest immediately.

Mutual Bank has a variety of investment vehicles for you to choose from, including mutual funds, variable and fixed certificates of deposit, self-directed stock plans, and money market accounts.

coffee and cookies...

When you drop by during our extended hours, we'll have fresh-brewed coffee on hand. And a choice of cookies.

So you can relax and enjoy a cup, as we help you find the right investment, or combination of investments, to meet your IRA or Keogh needs.

During these extended hours, we won't be handling any other banking transactions—just IRAs and Keoghs.

Make a note of the extended hours for these Mutual Bank offices. And drop by any of these six branches this Monday or Tuesday evening.

Brandeis exhibit

More than Holocaust in Jewish history

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

WALTHAM — A stunning pictorial exhibit now on display at Brandeis University will dispel any preconception that the history of Jewish oppression in Germany began with the rise of the Third Reich.

The exhibit, "Jews in Germany under Prussian Rule," is making its exclusive appearance in the Northeast at Brandeis' Farber-Goldfarb Library and Rapaporte Treasure Hall until May 30.

"It's been all over the country and, wherever it's been, thousands of people have seen it," exhibit coordinator Jane Weingarten said. "We hope that's what will happen here and we hope to reach an audience beyond the Jewish community."

Weingarten, a West Newton resident hired by Brandeis one year ago to bring the work to the Waltham campus, said people have been "very impressed" by the massive display, the largest of its kind ever assembled.

The painstakingly researched exhibit traces the Jewish experience and contributions to German culture from the Crusades through the modern-day Holocaust.

More than 1,000 enlarged reproductions of photographs and montages drawn from the archival resources of the Prussian Cultural Foundation in West Berlin are combined with a written narrative to graphically illustrate the Jewish plight.

The history begins in the year 975, when Emperor Otto II gave permission for Jews from an area known as Mark Brandenburg to engage in commerce with the "heathen" Slavic inhabitants of the East.

It tells how bourgeois German Jews and non-Jews were forced to use Berlin drawing rooms as a meeting ground to discuss literary and aesthetic topics.

Numerous instances of discrimination, brutal torture and expulsion, some dating back to the 15th century, are also portrayed, as is the critical role German Jews played in building the region's economy and their contributions to science and culture.

Gay Swirsky, a Sudbury resident who came to see the exhibit, described the display as "very impressive and emotionally moving."

"This lays the background for understanding the origins of modern-day anti-semitism," she added.

It takes more than an hour to fully explore the entire exhibit, which winds its way through the library, but each segment of the wooden display also can be appreciated individually.

Brandeis spokesman Jerry Rosenswaike said more than 300 people attended a special preview of the work on April 1.

"Once the word gets out, I'm sure it's going to do very, very well, as it has done elsewhere," he said.

The exhibit was brought to America with the assistance of the Foreign Office of the Federal Republic of Germany, the Leo Baeck Institute and Lufthansa Airlines.

It has been seen by more than 100,000 Americans of different religious faiths in Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Milwaukee.

Since its first showing in West Germany from 1981 to 1983, the exhibit has drawn critical acclaim.

It is the brainchild of Dr. Roland Klemig, a Christian and the director of the Prussian Cultural Foundation Picture Archives in Berlin.

Klemig, a former German army lieutenant captured by the Russians during World War II, uncovered a massive amount of material on the topic that had escaped wartime destruction.

The documents he found while researching his own archives and other sources spanned about 1,000 years and told a story of fierce Jewish loyalty to Germany against a background of centuries of injustice and hatred.

He eventually persuaded his own cultural foundation to mount an exhibit that would "show what Jews have done for this state" and what they had received in return.

"The historic relationship between German Jews and their adopted homeland has always been a one-sided affair," Klemig has said. "It was a marriage based on circumstances, a marriage of unrequited love which the Holocaust dissolved forever."

The exhibit is sponsored by the Brandeis B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, the Brandeis Tauber Institute for the Study of European Jewry and the American Jewish Historical Society.

Among its honorary sponsors are Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, U.S. Sens. Edward M. Kennedy and John Kerry, Cong. Barney Frank (D-Newton), Dr. Jurgen Kalkbrenner, consul general of the Federal Republic of Germany, and Michael Shiloh, consul general of Israel.

The exhibit is free and open to the public from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Mondays through Saturdays and from noon to 4 p.m. on Sundays.

It will be closed on April 10 and April 17.

In conjunction with the exhibit, the Hillel Foundation and the Tauber Institute have also arranged a series of lectures, symposia, films and concerts on the subject of German Jewry.

Run of Charles canoe race April 27

NEWTON — The fourth annual Run of the Charles canoe race sponsored by the Charles River Watershed Association is all set for Sunday, April 27. Since the Run was inaugurated in 1983, entries tripled to a total of 1,059 in 1985. CRWA expects this growth to continue, a clear response to public interest in enjoying the recreational opportunities the Charles River provides.

The Run of the Charles is a full day of canoe racing, with three distance courses plus a four-leg relay. The 41-mile race from Medfield is for racing canoes only.

Only recreational canoes are allowed in the 24-mile race from Needham, the nine-mile race from Auburndale, and the 19-mile relay from Dedham. All races end at MDC's Herter Park on Soldiers Field Road in the Allston section of Boston.

A tax-deductible entry fee of $10 per person must be submitted with the official entry form and postmarked by midnight April 14; after that, the entry fee doubles.

An official Run of the Charles T-shirt is given to each entrant. A brochure with all pertinent information including entry forms is available from CRWA at its temporary headquarters in the Newton Marriott Hotel or by mail on telephone request (527-2799).

Millions tackle do-it-yourself projects

By Lawrence Kilman
Associated Press writer

READING, MASS. — Frank Fernino is in his backyard, dressed in heavy coat and hat, and he's struggling to lift a heavy floorboard onto a half-completed second-story deck. As he works, a voice booms from a speaker like Big Brother gone amok.

"Frank, you don't look like you're suffering enough to me. Can you carry that up from below?"

The voice belongs to Russell Morash, the producer of "This Old House," the Emmy Award-winning home remodeling series that is one of the most popular shows on public television.

Morash is sitting in Fernino's basement, watching a television monitor and giving directions through a loudspeaker nailed to a tree. Outside, in frigid weather, Fernino is helping master carpenter Norm Abram build the deck while Bob Vila, the show's host, and a television crew make him the latest point man in the home renovation revolution.

Fernino, a balding man of 39, is the software manager of a computer company in Boston's suburban high-tech corridor. His wife, Mary Jane, is a substitute English teacher at the local high school. They have a 7½-year-old daughter named Betsy and are active in the PTA.

The Ferninos have an impressive woodworking shop in their home. They've used it to build an office, finish the basement, split a formal dining room off their kitchen and add a wood stove and insulation to their porch. Contractors helped put the pool in the backyard.

Now the one-story ranch house they bought in 1974 for $36,000 is too small. A two-story colonial nearby would suit them, but it costs $250,000. So the Ferninos decided to add a second floor to their home, a job that involved taking off the roof and adding three bedrooms, two bathrooms and a deck upstairs.

The renovation will cost about $50,000.

"When you think of the initial $36,000, even when you spend $50,000 it's a lot better than selling and going somewhere else," Mrs. Fernino said. "We have a half acre and an inground pool. We like our neighborhood, and we have a lot of work in this house."

The Ferninos are not alone. Each week, nearly 6 million viewers watch "This Old House" on 260 public television stations, and its popularity indicates a lot of people are seeking help with renovations.

Three-quarters of all households undertook do-it-yourself projects in 1984, compared with 39 percent in 1965, according to the DIY Research Institute in Indianapolis. Americans spent more than $69 billion on home improvements in 1984, and more than $38 billion belonged to the do-it-yourself segment.

By 1990, the home improvement market is estimated to top $113 billion, with $78 billion, or almost 70 percent, belonging to do-it-yourselfers.

The Ferninos have watched "This Old House" since the show began seven years ago. Early in 1985, they saw a newspaper advertisement for the show that sought homes to renovate on the air. They wrote and were accepted.

The show gets hundreds of letters from all over the country, but, with the exception of one house in Tampa, Fla., all houses have been in the Boston area, the home of WGBH, which produces "This Old House."

When Morash tells Fernino he's not suffering enough, Fernino climbs down from the scaffolding and hands the board up to the carpenter above. They shoot the scene five times before Morash is happy. Fernino is exhausted. "Frank, you're really gonna sleep tonight, kid," said Morash.

For the first five seasons, "This Old House" was a simple "how-to" show featuring professionals, and Morash decided the idea was growing stale. Last season, he began using home owners who were willing to become involved, a concept he calls "sweat equity."

"It seemed to be that people who were willing to put a little of themselves in a project were getting an enhanced value," Morash said. "I've seen people who just a few years ago would have hired a carpenter are now doing it themselves. My accountant, who a few years ago was sitting in his chair watching baseball, was now ripping shingles off the roof of his house."

It makes good television, as each episode ends at a dramatic point in construction.

"We've always told a story and left people hanging at the edge of their chairs," Vila said.

Will the Ferninos get their roof on before it rains? How will they overcome the inadequate ceiling joists?

It isn't "General Hospital," but millions of do-it-yourselfers are tuning in each week to find out.

Additions increase value of your home

By Better Homes
And Gardens

Depending on how well it's designed, an addition to your home can dramatically increase or decrease its value.

The editors of Better Homes and Gardens Remodeling Ideas say a well planned addition should fit in with its physical surroundings as well as your family life. Although exterior materials need not match the original, the new space should complement both the existing house and the landscape.

Before you begin any serious planning for your addition, you'll need to consider several points. The size of your lot, how you plan to use the space, local building codes, and type of house are just a few of the factors that determine your addition's location. The type of house you live in is an important consideration because different types of houses lend themselves to different types of additions.

You'll probably find your house type included in this article; if not, you're likely to find one or two others that will give you clues to the style and shape of the addition that would best suit your house. These guidelines deal with recent architecture. If you live in an older home whose styling doesn't fall into these categories, you'll need to modify the suggestions to fit your home's character.

One person's raised ranch is another person's bi-level. Terms vary from region to region, and the definitions are not always absolute. To get a clearer idea of what some basic house types are and what kinds of additions work well with them, here are brief descriptions of five major house types.

Ranch: Usually a one-story, low-to-the-ground structure with wide overhangs. A raised ranch has its basement area partly above ground, but stairs from outside usually lead directly to the main-level living area.

Split-level: Generally, a house that has floors halfway between other floors. One floor is often partially below ground level. Variations include side-by-side split and multilevel split.

Split-entry: This is a modified split level. The entry is one grade or a few steps above, with the main level half a flight up and the lower level half a flight down.

Story-and-a-half: Often called a Cape Cod, this low-profile house has a full flight of stairs connecting two levels. The roofline usually starts at the first story and peaks to allow headroom in about half of the second-story space.

Two-story: Has two complete stories, both out of the ground, connected by a full flight of stairs. Entry is usually up a few steps from grade.

Once you know your house type, you'll be ready for the next step: determining where and how to add on. The slope, or pitch, of the roof on the addition should match that on the original house to provide continuity. Matching the addition's windows, exterior surfaces and other features with the originals also can help prevent a tacked-on look.

Some guidelines on heirloom clocks

By Country Home

An antique clock possesses a charm that is unrivaled for the warmth it adds to a home.

If you are not fortunate enough to own a clock that has been handed down from generation to generation or bought on the day Great-Grandpa was born, you can purchase a "family heirloom" that will be precious to your family and treasured for generations.

In order to make a wise purchase, you must first set some guidelines, says Country Home magazine. The size clock you want and the highest price you are able to pay are the most obvious decisions to make.

Equally important is your purpose for buying a clock. Are you buying it strictly for the atmosphere it will create in your home, or will you consider it an investment?

This must be taken into consideration because not every charming clock is an antique or collectible clock. Those not considered collectible may never increase in value beyond keeping up with the inflation rate, while those favored by collectors will increase in value according to supply and demand.

American clocks, as a general rule, are more valuable than foreign clocks. This is largely due to the face that few clocks were produced in America. With the exception of the large, nine-tube grandfather clock, the last clock to be produced (not merely assembled) in the United States was sold new in the 1930s.

Most collectors favor American clocks, and, as collectors will, they periodically focus on a particular style. That style then becomes a true collector's item and the price zooms out of sight, making it inaccessible to the average family simply looking for an attractive clock. If you are part of that average family, the secret lies in finding a clock that appeals to you, but not the collectors.

Several styles that are readily available are low on the collectors' preferred list because they are fairly common, but what makes a clock undesirable to the serious collector can be a big plus for the clock buy-

Fabric is as important as style

MISHAWAKA, IND. (AP) — Fabric is just as important as style when it comes to buying new furniture or reupholstering old pieces, according to fabric designer Lee Mills.

"While you may not have the extra money to alter your home's size or layout, you can change its looks drastically by selecting the right fabrics and colors," says Mills, who is director of design for Naugahyde brand fabric.

"Fabric is a powerful design expression. With a splash of sizzling color or an accent of soft tones, you can light up or soothe, shape or define a room."

When selecting fabric, Mills advises, ask yourself what makes you feel good.

"How a fabric feels is just as important as how it looks," he explains, citing the natural coarseness of wool, the luxury feel of silk and the free-and-easy mood of cotton. Chintz, he adds, is a surprisingly tough fabric that's enjoying renewed popularity.

While all these fabrics are clasics, leather is unquestionably this decade's most important look, evoking richness and prestige, luxury and sensuality, says Mills. He points out that a high price tag can discourage some buyers, however.

Mills says Naugahyde can be a good substitute for leather which can "duplicate the texture and color variations of fine leather so precisely that even experts can't tell the two apart."

The main difference, he says, is a price that allows a greater number of people to enjoy the leather look — "with improved performance, including a built-in spot and stain resistant surface that leather doesn't have."

Print Finders will locate reproductions

By The Associated Press

Ever see a painting that would look perfect hanging on your wall — but the museum shop doesn't have a reproduction?

Thanks to a new mail order service founded by two New York women with extensive art and museum backgrounds, there is a good chance of getting a print anyway.

Called "Print Finders," the service offers to locate the desired reproduction and even have it framed and shipped ready to hang.

"Customers in my shop would ask about buying a reproduction of a piece of art — often without even knowing the name of the artist — and were so disappointed when we couldn't provide it that I'd try to research it for them," says Diane Moore, who works out of her Scarsdale, N.Y., home.

"If I found it, they were so delighted."

Miss Moore says her partner recalls that when she worked in the shop of a major museum "she started keeping catalogs of other museums and art outlets under the counter to help people seeking a print her museum didn't carry."

Comparing experiences, the women realized there was no single source for locating quality reproductions, and they founded "Print Finders." Their first customers came from museum shops and art dealers who gave their card to people whose requests they couldn't satisfy.

The service has listings of more than 20,000 reproductions and posters, including the most popular works of the world's best-loved artists as well as many lesser-known art works.

The customer simply sends them the title and the artist's name, if known, and they do their best to track down the reproduction anywhere in the world.

"If it exists, we'll find it," says Miss Moore.

Humphrey hoop all-star

MIDDLEBURY, VT. — Middlebury College sophomore John Humphrey of Newton, a standout performer on the Panther basketball team all season, ahas been named to the National Association of Basketball Coaches New England District Div. III All-Star team.

Humphrey, a 5-11 guard who has paced the Panthers in scoring for the past two years, was slected a member of the New Englnd second team by a vote of the regional coaches. The only other player from a Vermont college named to the second team was Kevlin Jenkins of Norwich University.

As Middlebury's leading scorer this year, Humphrey poured in 425 points for a 19.3 per game average despite an ankle injury that slowed him down at the tail end of the season.

He shot just over 44 percent from the floor and 69.7 percent from the free throw line. With 765 points in two seasons to his credit, Humphrey is a good bet to become the eighth Panther to top 1,000 points and has a shot at thje record if 1,498.

John Humphrey

The Panthers most consistent player this year, Humphrey is an Economics major at Middlebury. The Newton North High School graduate is the son of Mrs. Susanne Humphrey, 34 Lombard St., Newton and George Humphrey of Boston.

South lacrosse leans on defense

If Newton South is to successfully defend its Division 2 lacrosse championship this season, it will need to learn a new style of play. Last year's Lions had loads of scoring punch up front, but this spring's edition will have to rely on defense more than ever, due to an inexperienced group up front.

By the looks of it though, the defense will be up to the task. Lion coach Paul Murphy has six players back from last spring's 15-3 club, with the bulk of them on defense and at midfield.

The strength begins in goal, with returning All-Star Alex Levine. The senior is a three-year starter who likes to handle the ball and is capable of making the great save, especially in the clutch.

Levine can also provide an emotional lift to a team, both in his style of play and his attitude.

Making Murphy even more comfortable at that spot is senior Aram Blankenship, who has started for the junior varsity for two years. Murphy would have no qualms about going to Blankenship should the situation arise.

"He's very good," said the coach.

Another All-Star returns on one of the wings on defense. Though not overly big, the senior is very quick and has a good stick. Oliver was a standout for the wrestling squad during the winter.

Joining him as a returning varsity player on defense is Scott Goldberg. The senior will play in the middle, where his size becomes a factor. Like Oliver, Goldberg is an accomplished stickhandler.

Leading the candidates for the other wing is another 12th-grader, Jim Mercer. The tall defenseman is up from the junior varsity and looks ready to step into a starting role.

There's also a good group of reserves ready to go. John Hillis looks to be the first one off the bench. The junior is tough and "aggressive," according to Murphy.

Others who will see time include senior Mike Levine and sophomore Richie Blumenthal.

The midfield is keyed by senior Whit Dorf, the club's leading returning scorer. Dorf ran up 19 goals and 12 assists as a junior, and should be ready to step into the sniper role in his senior year. Dorf, a gymnast during the winter, will center the first line.

Joining Dorf on one wing is another returning starter, Dave Abroms. The senior posted 10 points as a junior, but should improve on that considerably this time around.

Rounding out the first line is sophomore Rama Malone. He's not that big, but Murphy said he "has a very good stick for a sophomore."

The second line is paced by another veteran, Neil Schwartz. He started much of last season, and though his point total wasn't overwhelming (4-5-9), he has the ability to do a lot of things well. He'll no doubt take over the scoring role on that line.

Flanking him are junior Paolo Sepe and senior Alex Olin. Murphy has confidence that his second line will be a threat any time it's on the field.

The third and fourth units are younger, as Murphy has the luxury of bringing along some underclassmen, thanks to the depth at midfield.

The only senior on the third line is Andy Katz, who will man a wing, Sophomore Scott Perrin will hold down the middle, with classmate John Morgan on the other side. The line features good quickness.

Senior Rob Goldberg (Scott's twin brother), junior Jeff Brewington and sophomores Rob Hillis and Mark Schwartz give Murphy some options for the fourth line.

Up front, the Lions are scrambling. Murphy has already moved one player up from middie, trying to get some experienced punch at the forward position.

Chris Berwind is the veteran who made the switch to forward. He played third line middie last spring. The coach is hoping the senior will make the conversion successfully and be the big scorer the Lions need. Berwind, who has a good stick, will play the middle.

John Gleason has virtually locked up another position. The junior led the junior varsity in scoring last spring, and has played well enough to earn a job in the preseason.

"He has a very good stick," said Murphy. "He's a big kid with a quick shot."

Four players are battling for the remaining forward slot. Senior Mark Dubnoff, juniors Matt Goldberg and Dom Costa, and sophomore Judd Levine (Mike's brother) are all neck-and-neck in the race for the open position.

Tiger stickmen ride past Moses Brown

Wars are won in the trenches, football games are won in the trenches, so why not lacrosse games?

Newton North lacrosse coach Rick Clark got a solid, blue collar performance from a small band of foot-soldiers Friday, opening the door to an 8-4 victory over visiting Moses Brown of Rhode Island in a non-league contest.

Clark calls his merry band the "grunt team" and it consists of defensemen Ed Lin and Josh Field and midfielders Zafar Khan, Steve Bourland, and Tim Troiano. The "grunts" operated with 80 percent efficiency in riding the Moses Brown attackers off the ball, thus sparking a potent offensive performance from the Tiger frontmen.

Newton jumped out to a 3-0 lead before a Moses Brown score with 10 seconds remaining in the half kept the visitors alive, but the Tigers buried the hatchet with four third-period tallies and an insurance marker in the fourth.

"We dominated the game," Clark said. "We did a tremendous job riding the ball. The defense really went crazy."

Senior attackman Josh Carpenter put Newton North on the board early, scoring off a dodge just two minutes into the game. A minute and a half later, senior Otto Mariano punched home his first of two on the day off a sweep for a 2-0 lead.

Sophomore Rusty Greiff made it 3-0 late in the second quarter, turning a shot from the left side with 1:10 to go before intermission.

Even though Moses Brown beat Tiger netminder Matt Keegan just before the half to cut the deficit to 3-1, Clark said his team was not rattled. The Tigers proved it with four big goals in the third.

Mariano added his second, John Flynn scored, Mark Adams converted on a sweep, and Kevin Devereaux ended the frame with a goal.

Keegan stopped 12 shots in boosting North to its first win of the season.

Natale top distance runner at U. of Texas

Liz Natale, one of Newton North High School's greatest female distance runners, is making her mark at the University of Texas. She sat out the 1985 track season after transfering from the University of Tennessee.

Liz Natale

Natale, one of three Longhorn cross country All-Americans last fall, has a season best of 4:29.39 in the 1,500 meters indoors. The 20-year-old junior has an extra year of outdoor track eligibility remaining due to an injury during her sophomore year at Tennessee.

At Newton North, she was state cross country champion in 1981 and 1982, won state indoor and outdoor mile titles and set school records in several middle distance events. Liz won three letters each in crooss country and track, and also played prep school soccer.

She earned All-America honors in 1983 as a Tennessee freshman with a 13th place finish in the 1982 NCAA cross country meet and also was 8th in the NCAA outdoor 1,500m race at Houston in 1983.

During the spring of 1985 she competed in open divisions. She finished first in the Kansas Relays 3,000m with a time of 9:27.66, was third in the Texas Relays 5,000m and was 10th in Penn Relays mile.

Joey DeNucci follows in dad's steps

Like father! Like son!

Joey DeNucci, who hopes to follow in the footsteps of his famous father, embarked on his boxing career Friday at the Worcester Boys' Club by winning a hard-fought decision in New England Junior Olympic Championships.

The 147-pound Newton North High freshman gained a three-round verdict over Anthony Anselak of Holyoke, last year's champion in the Senior (14-15 year-old) Division.

Young DeNucci has drawn a bye into the finals and will fight Paul Wilson of Cohasset out on Friday, April 18 , in Worcester. The wwinner will advance to the to the Regionals in New York and the next stop will be the Nationals.

Joey, a standout baseball and football player, stands 5-8, has broad shoulders and is very fast on his feet.

This was his first amateur fight after spending six weeks with the trainers and iinstructors at the Natick Boxing Club. He was accompanied by trainer Sil Paulini of Natick and his father Friday night.

Norton candidate for national honor

West Newton native Phil Norton is a candidate for the National Athletic Director of the Year Award.

Phil, who played football and basketball at St. Mary's High of Waltham in the 1940's, is currently serving as athletic director at Bourne High School. In recognition of his outstanding work in that field, he recently was honored at a banquet held at the Dunfey's in Hyannis as the Athletic Director of the Year in Massachusetts.

Previously, the National Council of Secondary School Athletic Directors announced that Norton had been chosen as the Eastern Region representative to compete in Cincinnati on April 9-13 with the winners from each of the other four regions in the United States for the National Award.

After graduating from Boston College in 1952, Phil launched his career at Norton High School where he served as both basketball coach and AD for 16 years. He then joined the Bourne Public School system.

He developed and expanded the athletic programs at both schools tremendously over those years, while being very active in that field on both state and national levels. He held many offices in both groups, a distinction that help qualify him as the Eastern region's top representative.

Phil, 58, is married and has seven children and resides in the village of Cataumet in Bourne. He was captain of the St. Mary's football team in his senior year and was a backcourter on the championship 1946 basketball team which went to the New England Catholic Tournament final.

Tigers looking for right mix

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

Coach Dick Walker hesitates to use the words "rebuilding year," but Newton North has an awful lot of holes to fill after going 15-5 last with a team that was senior-laden. Fortunately, Walker has seen a good crop of younger players come along to fill some of those holes, and is hoping his club will be in the thick of a "dogfight" in the Suburban League.

If nothing else, Tiger fans will see a different brand of baseball. Gone are the players who batted .366 as a team and combined for 20 home runs. In their place is a group that will have to scratch for runs. Pitching, defense and speed will be the keys this time around, and 3-2 will be a much more common score than 8-5.

With so little varsity experience available, a great deal of the load will fall on the co-captains, Aldo Calcagni and Ron Coppola. Both are returning lettermen.

Calcagni was the team's designated hitter last year, and looks to break into the left field job as a senior.

"He infuses something special into a ballclub," said Walker. "He has a fiery temperment and a strong desire to win."

Calcagni, a left-handed contact hitter with outstanding speed, will hit in one of the top two spots in the order.

Coppola has as much potential as anyone on the club, and he has yet to reach it. Coppola, 6-2, boasts strength and speed. Defensively, Walker has no worries in center. Coppola's problems in the past have been at the plate, but the coach sees some positive signs that he's coming around of late.

Rounding out the rather small veteran nucleus of the club is Dave LeConti. He proved himself under difficult circumstances last spring, filling in at shortstop when Jim Proia suffered through an illness and missed much of the season. LeConti is back as a senior and is "fielding with tremendous confidence," according to the coach.

Shortstop takes on added importance when it is realized that that is the only position up the middle that the Tigers have experience. Coppola should be steady in center, but that still leaves several jobs to fill. Before he settles on a lineup, the coach is taking a long look at a lot of people at just about every position. This includes LeConti's double-play partner at second base.

At the moment, the job is up for grabs among three candidates. Brian Scales, Paul Fay and Mark Markunas have all looked capable of handling the job. Scales, a senior, is in his first out for the team. Better known for his soccer abilities, he's shown a good bat and versatility, being able to play almost every position. Fay has looked very sharp for a sophomore, while Markunas, a junior, has been an "extremely pleasant surprise," said the coach.

Rounding out the up-the-middle spots (excluding pitching), is the catcher, where Walker has some "awfully big shoes to fill."

Colin Ryan is now at the University of Maine, and his presence will be missed. For two years, teams have avoided running on the Tigers.

Jim Giddon and Evan Galanis have the unenviable task of trying to live up to that standard. Galanis, a junior, played for the varsity last year, while Giddon, a senior, is up from the JV. Defensively, they're very similar. Galanis might be a bit sounder mechanically right now, with Giddon having a slight edge in arm strength.

The resolution of the catching situation will set in motion a series of moves, as Walker expects to see both players in the lineup. If Giddon starts behind the plate, Galanis will probably play first. If the decision goes the other way, Giddon could play either corner spot.

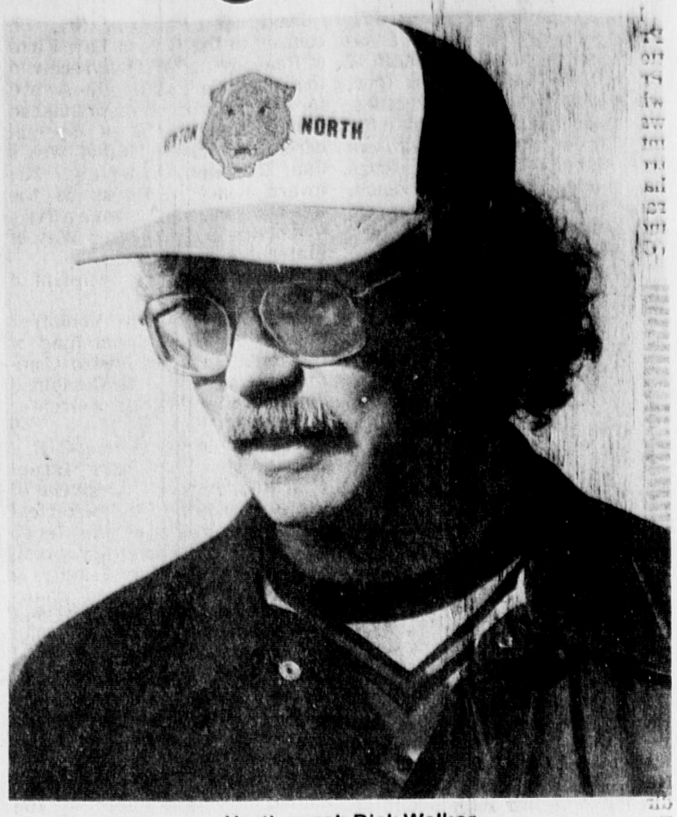

The runners-up in the second base race will also get consideration at the corners. Scales and Fay look very capable of playing at a corner.

Senior Ed O'Brien is another factor at third. He's definitely capable of handling the job defensively, but must prove he can handle varsity pitching.

The other candidate at first is Ben Solomon, one of the club's top pitchers. He hasn't been able to show what he can do offensively yet due to a broken bone in his hand, but at full strength he's a threat to force his way into the lineup.

The outfield is more settled, though several players are pressing for jobs. The co-captains look to be set in left and center, but they may be joined by a freshman.

George Maxcey is one of three ninth-graders with the varsity, the first three Walker has ever carried. Far from being overmatched, Maxcey's speed and bat have pushed him into the leadoff spot in the order.

North coach Dick Walker

"He's shown confidence," the coach said. "I don't see how we're going to keep him out of the lineup."

Should any of the outfielders falter, Mike DeGeorge and Andy Lyons appear ready to step in. Both are seniors up from the junior varsity with good speed. Lyons is another pitching candidate as well.

The pitching staff is one big question mark when it comes to varsity competition. Despite a nice mix (four seniors, a sophomore and two freshmen) there is a total lack of varsity experience.

In addition, noted Walker, "we don't have the luxury of a strikeout pitcher. What we do have is a pitching staff that will rely on control and being able to set up the hitters."

Solomon looks like a good bet to start the opener. Right-handed, as are all seven hurlers, the senior is a "fastball-slider" type pitcher, according to the coach. Solomon must keep the ball down to be effective.

The other pitchers are all very close in ability. Any of them could emerge as the second and third starters.

Lyons has the strongest arm on the staff, and is probably the closest thing to a strikeout pitcher the Tigers have. More consistency with his breaking pitch could make him a standout.

Scales is more of a breaking-ball type, using that pitch to set up the fast ball. The pitching prospects for Scales and Fay will depend on the makeup of the infield, as Walker likes to stick with a set lineup on defense.

Senior Sid Queler is up from the junior varsity. His biggest strength is being able to throw strikes, which could put him in a relief role.

The freshmen, Jason DeGeorge (Mike's brother) and Steve Leonard, have a bright future that could begin immediately.

DeGeorge is a six-footer who has a good breaking ball but needs more consistency with his fastball. He's also an aggressive hitter who can play the infield and outfield.

Leonard has "tremendous poise for a freshman," Walker said. "He could be one of our top three pitchers."

Lion girls gunning for tournament

Name a plus going into the season and the Newton South Lions have it. Experience, particularly on the pitching staff? They lost only four players, and both hurlers are back. Past success? The group that is back went 12-8 last year and made the tournament. Returning All-Stars? Try Katrina Antonellis, everyone's All-Leaguer. Veteran coach? Larry Caranfa returns for his second season after gaining the tourney berth as a rookie.

The talent begins with Antonellis, but by no means ends there. In her final season of athletics at South, the four-year starter will key the club defensively at shortstop and offensively in the number three spot. She was an All-Star last year, and will be awfully tough to keep off the club as a senior.

Another key defensive position, catcher, is filled by veteran Dede Theodore. Only a junior, this is her third varsity season. She hit over .400 with power last year and will bat cleanup.

She will have the luxury of catching a veteran pitching staff. Senior Maria Croveau and sophomore Julie Blankstein split the duties last year, and will do the same this time around.

Croveau throws from the right side, with Blankstein coming in from the left. Caranfa is bringing along freshman Elaine Theodore (Dede's sister) as the third pitcher, second catcher and backup outfielder.

Alongside Antonellis will be Jen Lerman, replacing the departed Liz Shiman. Only a junior, Lerman is a tri-captain and Caranfa expects her to be "a real strong third baseman.

Michelle Meyers has pretty much nailed down the third-base job. The senior was injured most of last season, but has been impressive in the early going. She has looked sharp defensively, and is an aggressive hitter.

One position that is going down to the wire is second base, where Joanne Chao and Anna Otero are still in the running. Chao was an outfielder last spring, and is one of the fastest girls on the squad. Otero also needs more time at second, but looks to have a natural talent for defense.

The outfield is made up of a veteran crew. Tri-captain Sandy Bonazoli is back in left. She's a good fielder and hitter, but her best feature might be her aggressiveness on the bases. Next to Bonazoli is third-year varsity member Jessica Olansky. A part-time starter last spring, Olansky has the speed and the glove to do the job in the middle.

Laura Baumberg seems to have the inside track in right. She "plays hard," according to Caranfa, and is a good enough fielder to move over to center if necessary.

Others who will see action include senior first baseman Tammy Barone and senior outfielder Lori Salter.

"We have to execute," the coach stressed. "We have to throw strikes. We have to be mentally in every game. All the other teams in the DCL have improved."

If the Lions are to make a return trip to the tournament, they'll have to get by most of those clubs. Among the biggest obstacles, according to Caranfa, are Acton-Boxboro and Bedford.

Also, the American Cancer Society's Massachusetts Division, the United Way's partner in education and fund raising in business and industry, will receive more than $1 million.

The allocations decisions were made by about 150 United Way volunteers serving on six citizen review committees. Through this citizen-review process, volunteers evaluate agencies according to program and financial accountability, management, service delivery, and overall performance.

WINNING SPURS US ON . . .

Transcript Newspapers have won many awards for Excellence over the years. We are always proud to receive these accolades from our peers. We say "Thank You" with humility and perspective. It gives us a good feeling to be recognized, and a good measure of satisfaction from the realization that we are doing a good job. The one thing we have never done is to rest on our laurels.

This year's 16 awards (for 1985) from New England Press Association bring the total award count to 191 in the past 10 years for Transcript Newspapers from New England's two newspaper organizations.

As our roster of awards grows, our circulation grows, and that is the most rewarding of all. It means that Transcript Newspapers is fulfilling its primary obligation to its readers . . . the obligation of community service.

To our readers we say, "Winning awards spurs us on. Thank you for helping us grow."
